Net Tightens on Million-Dollar Bandits

WOUNDED SUSPECT CONFESSES PART IN TRAIN HOLDUP

J. H. Wayne Admits He Is Robber Shot by Chief Crawling Under Mail Car.

TOM O'CONNOR NAMED AS ONE OF ROBBERS

Two of Men Held Partially Identified by Railway Mail Clerks Who Were on Train.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Chicago, June 14.—A quick solution of all details of the holdup Thursday night of a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul mail train a few miles from Chicago by four automobile loads of bandits who obtained money and bonds valued at upwards of $1,000,000 was predicted by the police tonight after two mail clerks had positively identified one men as a train robber.

J. H. Wayne, desperately wounded, and believed by the police to be the bandit who was shot by a companion who mistook him for a mail clerk during the robbery, is the man identified as one of the bandits. With three other men and a woman, Wayne was taken into custody in a spectacular raid on a flat as the result of a tip that the bandits would be found there.

Had Two Shooting Stories.

At first Wayne told the police that he was shot while near Hammond, Ind., by a woman of the name of Margaret Ray. Later, he said a bootlegger shot him. Five bullet wounds were found in his body and doctors said he probably would die. The other suspects are Walter McComb and his wife, whose flat was raided, and Paul Wade, who said he lived in Tulsa, Okla., and James Mahoney, who were found in the flat.

"We are making rapid progress in the case and expect to reach a solution before long," Mathew Simmer, deputy superintendent of police, said in announcing identification of one suspect.

Suspect Tommy O'Connor.

Meanwhile, Sheriff Peter M. Hoffman, after a perusal of his records, said a description of one of the bandits tallies almost exactly with that of "Lucky Tommy" O'Connor, Chicago murderer, who broke jail three years ago five days before he was to have been hanged.

A new $1,000 bill and a $500 bill were found in Wayne's clothing and a $1,000 bill was found in Wade's pocket. Serial numbers of the bills do not correspond with those of any of the money thus far reported stolen, it was announced after a hurried check.

Wade an Aviator.

Wade was reported to have been an aviator and this fact led to a revival of the theory that the bandits escaped in an airplane seen near the scene of the holdup the morning after the robbery.

The known loot was increased today to $447,000 in cash and bonds but it was admitted that more than this amount is missing and unofficial sources placed the loss at between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000. Postal inspectors and government agents were devoting a great part of their time to investigation of the theory that the robbery was the result of information given the bandits by a postal employee or federal bank employee, this theory being due to the faultless precision with which the holdup was executed.

Wayne Confesses.

After two detectives left for the scene of the robbery late today it was reported that a confession had been obtained from one of the suspects held and that the officers had gone to try to locate the place where the loot was buried.

It also was reported that Wayne had said later that he was shot by the bandit leader for disobeying orders. The police did not reveal which of the suspects had admitted participation in the holdup but said two others besides Wayne had been partly identified by mail clerks as participants.

Expect All Loot.

"We have some of the bandits," Chief of Police Collins said tonight. We hope to have them all before morning. We expect to have all the loot then, too."

Captain William Shoemaker said that the bandits had overlooked $500,000 which was in one mail sack left by the robbers.

Though the police predicted they would recover the loot intact, the two detectives sent to the scene of the robbery returned tonight emptyhanded. The police also were reported to have found some evidence, as yet unrevealed, in their raid on the flat today which tended to make them confident that some of those in custody are implicated in the robbery.

The police held the prisoners tonight, but planned later to turn them over to the federal authorities in order to forestall writs of habeas corpus in the state courts for their release.

COMMUNITY ROW ENDS IN BURST OF ARSON FIRES

Tuscumbia, Ala., June 14.—In a wave of arson following community strife, seven homes and a schoolhouse have been burned in Colbert county several miles from here, according to a report made by deputies to the state fire marshal. As a result of the fire marshal's investigation, three men have been arrested on charges of arson and another charged with perjury.

Bitter factionalism has existed in the community for some time, according to deputies. The school-house burned just after the term closed and a church since erected on the site is being guarded against destruction. Part of the community insisted on the rebuilding of the school on the site rather than the church, officials report.

The Colbert county grand jury has been asked to conduct an investigation.

REPUBLICAN SPLIT ON BUTLER GETS EAR OF COOLIDGE

Arrogant Tactics of President's Campaign Manager Have Put Heavy Crimp in Harmony.

BY RAYMOND CLAPPER.

Washington, June 14.—William M. Butler, the Coolidge campaign manager and new chairman of the national republican committee, suddenly has become an acute issue within the republican organization because of his bungling and tactless handling of affairs at Cleveland.

The dictatorial methods employed, coupled with a somewhat unfortunate personality, have created a surprising amount of criticism which extends into high circles. The president himself is reserving judgment until he hears Butler's side of it here next week.

Coolidge has been told already that the trouble with Cleveland was due to Butler. That Butler left the convention run away from him twice is all the more amazing in view of the fact that Coolidge had all but a pitiful handful of the delegates.

Resented His Arrogance.

The refusal to accept either Kenyon or Hoover was no reflection on the president, or upon the abilities of the two suggested candidates. It was an outburst of resentment at the arrogant tactics of Butler.

This already has been made clear to Coolidge through Secretary Slemp, who celceled plans for a fence-building trip through the south in order

Rotary Appeals To Help Solve Problem of Boys

Amusement and Occupation of Over 50,000 Youths on Vacation Is Real Job.

Appealing the grown-ups in particular, the fathers of boys, the boys' work committee of the Atlanta Rotary club has issued a call for efforts to meet the problem of amusement, recreation and occupation for the 52,000 scholars who were released one week ago from their school work and set free to occupy their extensive leisure time during the long summer vacation.

The problem of the boy's future has been one of the principal activities of the local Rotary club, through its boys' work committee. In the appeal Saturday this committee says it is their opinion, after several years' work and observation, that the real problem is to interest the man in the conditions which confront his boy and every other boy released from school, with his time unoccupied.

Problem of Committee.

"We are trying to bring to the reader's attention," says the committee statement, "whether he is a father or not, that he is in that great army marching over the road he cannot retravel, and behind him come the reserves to take his place when he reaches the end of the trail. Is it asking too much of him to remove the rocks over which he has stumbled; to fill up the ditch which blocked his path; to put up a warning where an attractive but dangerous detour stands as a lure to the innocent? Let him make the path he leaves broader, smoother and less dangerous for the feet of those who follow him, and when he reaches the crest of the last

GEORGIA SOLONS TO GATHER SOON FOR ANNUAL MEET

$48,000,000 Bond Issue Proposal Certain To Be Center of Determined Fight in Both Houses.

MANY NEW REFORM MEASURES PROPOSED

Quiet Election Year Forecast by Observers as Candidates Show Little Speed in Qualifying.

BY RALPH T. JONES.

When the Georgia legislature convenes on June 25, one week from next Wednesday, it will gather in the historic lawmaking halls at the capitol for the third time within the past 12 months. For, in addition to the regular summer sessions of 1923 and 1924, there was an extraordinary session last November and December, called by the governor primarily to enact tax reform measures.

The purpose of the extra session was defeated, however, when the house and senate adjourned, hopelessly deadlocked, over amendments to a proposed income tax measure for the state revenues.

Frequency of legislative sessions is of particular interest this year in view of the probability that laws to create a system of biennial, instead of annual sessions, of the assembly will be among the chief reforms undertaken during the coming 50 days of parliamentary debate. A companion bill to the biennial sessions bill, which will also be introduced, is one to make the terms of office of elective state house officers four years instead of two, with the proviso that the governor shall not be a candidate to succeed himself in office. Both proposed laws are claimed, by their sponsors, to be steps toward relieving Georgia of the burden of annual political entanglements, and the waste of strenuous campaigns for election every other year.

May Reduce Numbers.

In the same class of legislation is a bill which may be introduced again which would reduce the size of both houses of the legislature on the idea that 206 members of the lower house and 51 of the senate, are altogether too many, and make both bodies too cumbersome for effective administration. This bill was introduced last year but met a speedy death.

There are numbers of other bills of unusual interest which will occupy the attention of members of both houses, under the gavels of President George H. Carswell, in the senate, and Speaker W. Cecil Neill in the house.

One of the most important issues to be discussed is a proposal, sponsored by Representative Mann, of Glynn county, for a $40,000,000 state bond issue for the building of a great system of paved roads linking every county in the state, and for another bnod issue of $8,000,000 for the building of schools and new buildings for state-owned institutions of higher earning.

Under Mr. Mann's plan, no new

Two Youths Held On Theft Charges Put on Probation

Judge Decides To Give Them Chance To Avoid the Penitentiary.

Suspended sentences of twelve months on the chaingang were held over the heads of John B. Farrior, 17, and C. C. Coleman, 16, Jacksonville boys, Saturday by Judge G. H. Howard when they pleaded guilty to driving an automobile from Atlanta to Birmingham without the owner's consent.

The court, in passing sentence, told the boys that he did not want to send them to the gang if there was any chance to prevent it.

"You have done wrong, and if you do so again the term the court is giving you will have to be served," Judge Howard said. "To see whether you have the stuff in you, I am going to let you go with a twelve months' term suspended. If you get into trouble again you will have to serve this sentence."

Judge Howard said to put the boys in the gang might make hardened criminals of them, and in view of the fact they were too old to be sent to the reformatory, he would use the only other alternative of leniency.

HOLDUP IS STAGED AT GROCERY STORE

Bandits Make Escape After Hot Chase, Although Auto They Had Stolen Is Recovered.

Two unidentified negroes drove a car in front of a branch store of L. W. Rogers Grocery company, at Hill and Clark streets, about 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon, and while one of them remained at the steering wheel of the car, the other entered the shop and held up the manager, a clerk and six customers at the point of an automatic, while with his left hand he removed $25 in cash from the cash register.

After getting the money, the negro ordered those in the store to proceed to the rear while he retreated to his car and he and his partner made good their escape.

A passerby who saw the negroes enter the store notified detective headquarters, and Officers J. W. Woolley and J. C. Mosley went immediately to the scene, reaching there just in time to see the bandits drive off.

In the race that followed, one of the rear tires of the bandits' car came off, turning the machine over and tossing the occupants to the ground at th corner of Martin and Hammock streets. The negroes, however, escaped through an alley.

Upon investigation, it was learned that the car driven by the bandits was one reported stolen from J. D. Thatcher, of 804 Fourth National Bank building, and the license number of the machine was reported as stolen from E. T. McGee, of Williamson, Ga.

MOTHER WATCHES TWO CHILDREN DIE IN BLAZING HOME

Luray, Va., June 14.—How a mother was forced to stand by powerless and watch her two young children burn to death was told in dispatches received here today from Honeyville, 10 miles south of Luray.

Mrs. Jack Alger had locked the children, aged 3 and 4 years, in their home while she went to Stanley, several miles distant, to purchase some coushold necessities. Upon her return she found the house afire. Her husband was in Warren county, where he is employed, and the nearest neighbor was some distance away. Her every effort to break down the doors and windows was fruitless and finally she was forced to watch through the window the faint efforts of the children to get away from the flames. Their charred bodies were found in the ruins of the home.

LIEUT. ZELLARS WILL BE BROUGHT HOME FOR BURIAL

Washington, June 14.—(Special.) Arrangements with the navy department were made today for authority to bring the body of Lieutenant T. M. Zellars to Brantville, Ga., for interment. He was killed in the accident on the U. S. S. Mississippi on the Pacific coast last Thursday. Senator W. J. Harris conferred with the navy officials at the request of the father, T. M. Zellars, and former Congressman W. C. Adamson, who is related to the late officer.

POTSDAM ECHOES TO ROYAL CHEERS

Unveiling of Memorial Takes on Guise of Monarchist Demonstration for Three Princes.

Berlin, June 14.—Monarchist sentiment broke into a frenzy Saturday when members of the German royal family received a tremendous ovation at Potsdam as Crown Prince Eitel Friedrich presided at the unveiling of a memorial.

Roaring thousands greeted the royal guests on their arrivals. Colors of the empire and flag-draped pictures of Frederick the Great decorated the whole city.

Following the ceremony, the affair grew to the proportions of a monarchial demonstration. Cheering veterans of the World war filled the street so that it was with difficulty that the crown prince and princess were able to reenter their auto.

More than 6,500 picturesque grenadiers, many of them over six feet in height and dressed either in army uniforms or in frock coats and top hats, took part in the parade preceding the unveiling.

The great procession "goose stepped" down the Potsdam streets to the slow, ominous beat of muffled drums. When Eitel Friedrich had finished the unveiling and the speeches were finished, pandemonium broke loose. The procession, with the blare of trumpets and the great boom of unmuffled drums, marched triumphantly to the city fortress and a great public dinner.

Two other sons of the former kaiser were present. They were Princes Oskar and August Wilhelm. There were in addition a great many members of the Hapsburg court—princes, barons, counts from many provinces.

STATE UNIVERSITY MUST HAVE MONEY

Annual Report of Board of Inquiry Asks $40,000 Annual Appropriation From State.

Athens, Ga., June 14.—(Special.) Recommendations for an increase in the maintenance fund and a dormitory for women, physics building, and needed repairs to old buildings, in order to safeguard the classification of the University of Georgia, are contained in the report of the board of inquiry today to the board of trustees.

The dangerous situation which the school is up against is not a theoretical one—it is an actual fact, so the board of inquiry pointed out after making an exhaustive study of conditions at the institution last December. The board was appointed by the trustees last year, and is composed of Judge George F. Gober, Marietta, chairman; Lloyd Cleveland, Griffin; A. S. Hardy, Gainesville, and William H. Fleming, Augusta.

Lose $40,000 Annuity.

This board called attention to the following conditions:

$40,000 Per Year Lost.

1. The university loses $40,000 per year funds this July 1, when the general education board ends payment of a three-year annuity of that amount.

2. The $40,000 fund from the general education board has made it possible for the university to make some additions in the teaching staff and increase salaries in order to retain a faculty commensurate with the standing of the institution.

3. If the $40,000 annuity is not replaced by the state, the university will have to "let its teaching force go for lack of money to pay them, and have cheaper men in their places."

4. That it is the duty of the board of trustees themselves to go before the legislature and get this money, pointing out that the "legislature is fair and kindly disposed toward the university, and if the case is properly presented, with the improved condition of the state treasury, we can get this money."

High Moral Standard.

5. That in the opinion of the board of inquiry, there is "no institution in the country where there exists a higher moral standard," and that "parents of the state need have no fear of sending their sons and dauzhters to the university."

6. That the admission of female students to the university has "prov-

ISLAND DELEGATES GET FIRST BADGES

New York, June 14.—The huge badges of the democratic national convention appeared on the streets for the first time today with the arrival of the Porto Rican delegates, the first of the 54 state and territorial units to establish a convention residence.

The island delegates were welcomed by R. Martinez and others of the Porto Rican entertainment sub-committee. They were escorted to the Hotel Belmont, where the official courtesies of the New York convention committee were bestowed in the form of greetings and theater tickets.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

New York, June 14.—Signs of the near approach of the national democratic convention began to multiply today as national organization officials, subcommittee chieftains, boom leaders, delegates and just plain democrats began drifting in to size up the preconvention situation.

Cordell Hull, chairman of the party, held a series of conferences with J. Bruce Kremer, vice chairman; Norman E. Mack, national committeeman from New York; Scott Ferris, of Oklahoma; Thomas B. Love, of Texas; Isadore Dockweiler, of California, and Edward Quinn, of Massachusetts.

Mr. Dockweiler began drafting plans for the seating of delegations, preliminary to a formal session next Monday of the subcommittee which will allot positions on the convention platform.

McAdoo on Way.

Workers for William G. McAdoo announced their candidate was en route from California and would arrive next Wednesday to take personal charge of his campaign.

Governor Smith, already on the field of action, spent the first day as his own campaign director in making two outdoor speeches, attending a Flag day dinner, reviewing a parade of Masons, and distributing toys to east side children.

Alleged Informer In Narcotic Case Sent to Hospital

Victim of "Dope" Ring, Says Mills—Three Arrests Made.

Three men, Sid A. Allen, 27, of 225 Mountain View avenue; Otis A. Stephens, 23, of 290 West Fourteenth street, and Charles Jenkins, 25, of 52 West Peachtree place, were arrested Saturday night and held without bond for the United States government in connection with an attack on Earl H. Mill alleged informer for city detectives, detalled to the narcotic squad.

Hll was carried to Grady hospital Saturday night suffering from blows on the head, which, he claims, were administered by the three men. The prisoners, he charges, are members of a "dope" ring which he recently "turned up."

The alleged assault took place in an apartment at 50 West Baker street Saturday night, and was investigated by City Detectives E. M. Cason and W. D. McGee, who arrested the three men.

FOUR BADLY HURT, HOMES AND CROPS ARE WASHED AWAY

Two Families in Same House Swept to Death by Sudden Wall of Angry Water.

MILES OF RAILWAY MADE IMPASSABLE

Rivulets Suddenly Jump to Huge Torrents Which Sweep Over Villages in Valleys.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Johnson City, Tenn., June 14.—Twelve known dead, four seriously injured, more than a dozen houses, barns and mills demolished, twenty miles of the Appalachian division of the Southern railway made impassable with parts washed away, and thousands of acres of farm land ruined, constitute the toll of the most disastrous cloudburst ever recalled in this section. It appeared to have its center near Hunter, Siam and Carden's Bluff, and on Little Stony creek and Blue Springs creek, where a house, in which were two families, went to pieces, taking nine lives.

The dead are: Mrs. Cecil Lewis and five children, aged 14, 10, 4, 2 years and 4 months; B. W. Smith, his wife and 7-year-old son, Williard, all of whom were in the Lewis house; a 6-year-old daughter of N. G. Ellis, an unidentified sawmill hand, and A. B. Irick, of Fish Springs, Tenn.

Homes Washed Away.

Four dwellings, a storehouse and a mill, with considerable livestock, were washed away in the vicinity of Siam. Four small houses at Fish Springs went with the tide.

The storm came without warning last night and early today, and its fury was graphically told by Cecil Lewis and his sons, Walter and Charles, 7 and 11 years of age, who were brought to a hospital in Johnson City, suffering from bruises and cuts. The younger boy, with his cheek cut through into his mouth, remained in a treetop three hours, waiting for the waters to recede.

Lewis stated that he was thrown from his house when a wall of water, which he estimated to be twelve feet high, and filled with rock, earth and trees, struck the house. After being washed down the valley a short distance, he reached the bank and made his way to the house of a neighbor, Edward Smith. As he entered the house it was struck by the torrent, which turned the house completely around. Lewis was again thrown outside, but landed against a barbed wire fence and escaped.

Caught Branches of Tree.

His two sons, Charles and Walter, escaped by catching the branches of a tree, almost submerged. The younger boy caught the tree and pulled his brother up, and there they remained until the receding waters allowed them to climb down. A neighbor attracted by their cries came to their aid and they were hurried to the hospital.

The bodies of Mrs. Smith and her son have been recovered. None of the bodies of the Lewis family have been recovered.

A 6-year-old daughter of N. G. Ellis was washed away while her father was attempting to rescue other members of his family from their home. Her body was found later, with the dress caught against a barbed wire fence.

Two Bodies Lost.

The unidentified sawmill hand was swept into the river. Likewise, no trace has been found of the body of A. B. Irick, who was swept away while attempting to walk from Fish Springs to Butler. All communication out of and east of Hunter, six miles from Elizabethton, and from Hampton, four miles to the south, was cut off with the destruction of telephone lines, washing out of railroad and demolishing of roadways.

Information as to the extent of the storm was not received until parties who walked a distance of about 20 miles reached Elizabethton.

The railroad tracks of the Southern railway, Appalachian division, were washed out in seven places between Hunter and Carden's Bluff. About four miles beyond that point the tracks were deeply covered with earth, boulders and trees. An embankment between Fish Springs and Butler was washed out for a distance of 200 feet, and several trestles were made unsafe.

Spend Night in Church.

Residents of Fish Springs, fleeing from the storm, abandoned their houses as the water arose, and first took refuge on box cars. A number gathered in a church, remaining there the remainder of the night.

The highways were strewn with boulders, logs, trees and earth.

Waters of the Watauga are said to have risen eight feet in a single hour, forcing campers to higher ground.

Power lines of the Watauga Power company, whose plant is operated at a 55-foot dam across the Watauga near Siam, were put out of commission. Water, which had been flowing over the dam at a depth of three inches, suddenly rose until a torrent five feet deep was sweeping over the top, threatening the dynamos and generators at the fot of the dam, protected by a concrete wall.

Started at 9 P. M.

The storm was viewed from a distance by many in nearby towns, who reported that black clouds gathered about 9 o'clock in the evening, swinging first south, then southeast, turning north and finally northeast. Two sets of clouds appeared to meet at a point near Hunter, presenting the spectacle of an apparent double cloudburst. Its intensity spent, the clouds appeared to swing to the northwest, gradually dispersing into showers, deluging the country on their way for a distance of a dozen miles.

From a preliminary survey, a conservative estimate of at least one million dollars is made of the property damage. Hundreds of acres of farm land were swept clear of soil and covered with boulders, trees, brush and debris. About 20 miles of railroad is unfit for use; 30 miles of highway, some improved, is ruined; 12 miles of the Laurel Fork railway destroyed. Scores of horses, mules and cattle were drowned and all growing crops ruined. More than $100,000 is the estimated damage in the Hunter section; $200,000 in the vicinity of Siam and Carden's Bluff; $200,000 near Braemar. These figures do not include cost of railroads and highways.

The storm came without warning, raising the Watauga, the Doe, the Little Doe, the Elk and their tributaries as if gigantic wells had opened in the ground.

TRAFFIC TIED UP ON SOUTHERN.

Charlotte, N. C., June 14.—Traffic on the Bristol-Mountain City line of the Southern railway will be partly tied up for at least 15 hours as the result of flood damage in that region, it was announced at headquarters of the Southern railway lines east here today.

One trestle was washed out and tracks were destroyed for a distance of about a half mile, it was stated. Passengers and mail will be transferred over the washout, it was said. Only one train each way per day is operated on this line.

ONE CHILD KNOWN TO HAVE BEEN DROWNED.

Briston, Tenn.-Va., June 14.—One child is known to have been drowned and ten miles of track of the Southern railway has been washed away between Butler, Tenn., and Hunter, Tenn., as a result of the Watauga river, overflowing its banks, following rains in this section for the past two days.

A Baptist church was washed away in the Blue Springs section near Siam. The home of Al Bowers, with a mill, barn, storehouse and an automobile, was washed away. Several head of mules were drowned when a barn belonging to Blaine Oliver was washed away. Buildings on the farms of Lindsay Rash and Pep Bowers also were destroyed.

In the Siam section, according to reports reaching Elizabethton, the home of Andy Lewis and the mill, barn and home of Mack Elliott were washed away.

Unverified reports reaching here this afternoon stated that the town of Elizabethton had been inundated, and that 15 persons were missing there. This report, however, was denied by the chief dispatcher of the Southern railway here, who stated that only one person was known to have been drowned and that several persons were missing in and around Butler.

CHILD IS KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

Dickson, Tenn., June 14.—The 10-year-old child of Clyde Sutton, living ten miles north of here, was killed by lightning and a younger seriously injured last night during a heavy wind and rain storm. One partly finished house was blown from the foundation, trees were blown down, crops and highways damaged, and wires rendered useless.

RED CROSS SENDS MAN TO RELIEF.

Upon receipt of a news dispatch that the towns of Hunter and Carden's Bluff, Tenn., had been virtually wiped out by a cloudburst early Saturday, southern division headquarters of the American Red Cross here announced they had dispatched Everett Dix, staff representative, to the affected territory to take charge of relief measures.

J. C. Logan, superintendent, said Saturday night that until Mr. Dix reached the scene of the disaster some time today he would know nothing of what relief measures are to be taken.

Atlanta Most Liberal City In State to Public Schools

Cost Per Pupil Here About $50, Against $43.70 in Macon and Less in Other Cities.

Atlanta spent more to educate each child in public schools during the scholastic year which ended June 1 than any other of the five largest cities in Georgia, and spent nearly four times as much in all as Augusta, the next most liberal city in school support, it was revealed in figures made public Saturday.

Atlanta's total expenditure for school operating expenses, exclusive of all outlay for buildings, grounds, permanent equipment and the like, was $2,303,000 for the year ending June 1, according to vouchers in the city comptroller's office.

The actual number of pupils enrolled had not been determined Saturday at the census and attendance department of the school system, where work of consolidating reports from the more than 50 schools was in progress.

Over 47,000 Pupils.

An estimate of 47,000 pupils for the year, exclusive of special and part-time school work, made by the census director at the close of school last week, was the only available figure. On that basis, Atlanta spent $49.94 to educate each child in the school system.

Augusta spent $43.70 on each pupil, according to the report by Superintendent Lawton B. Evans, who announced that a total of $590,000 had been spent during the year to educate 13,500 pupils.

Macon spent $32.33 on each pupil, according to report by Superintendent C. H. Bruce, who announced that $469,000 had been spent during the year to educate 14,500 pupils.

Savannah spent $28.25 on each pupil, according to Superintendent Carleton B. Gibson, who announced that $432,000 had been spent to educate 16,000 pupils, the next largest enrollment to that of the Atlanta school system.

Columbus Spent $40.

Columbus was reported to have spent $40 on each pupil during the year, although the total cost and total enrollment figures were not made public.

The cost per pupil in Atlanta schools was a point of disagreement between Superintendent Willis A. Sutton and Alderman W. B. Hartsfield, author of the charter amendment aimed to abolish the present school board.

Superintendent Sutton, at the close of school last week, had estimated Atlanta's cost per pupil to be about $41 on a basis of 52,000 enrollment. The total operating cost computed in the city comptroller's office was $2,303,000 for the year, which would have made a per pupil cost of $44.30, even on the basis of 52,000 enrollment.

Estimate Questioned.

Alderman Hartsfield questioned the 52,000 estimate as a true basis for computing the cost per pupil, declaring it included special classes at which adults spent two or three hours a week for a limited period during the year. Such class enrollments, he contended, had the effect of sharply decreasing the estimated cost per pupil for the entire system. The cost, he said, should be figured on the basis of pupils enrolled for regular school work.

The larger cost of Atlanta's schools, regardless of the basis of figuring the cost, was attributed by school authorities to superior quality of education offered in Atlanta schools and higher cost of living, which has forced a higher teachers' salary scale in Atlanta than in any other city in the state.

Comparative figures on teachers' salaries were not available at the school department, but it was stated that they are largely in excess of those paid in the smaller cities of Georgia.

Junior Highs Expensive.

Junior high schools were cited as another cause of higher costs. Classes are smaller in junior high schools than in elementary schools and the cost per pupil is higher as a result. The junior high schools were declared, however, to be a necessity. Figures were advanced showing sharp reduction in the number of failures in junior high school grades this year as compared to the same grades last year before they were separated into the junior high schools, which include seventh, eighth and ninth grades. Fewer students drop out of school during those years, it was shown.

Adjustment classes for children who are deficient in their class work was said to be another cause of the higher cost. Children behind in any subjects or all subjects in their grades are placed in small special classes in which they make up the work in which they are deficient and are thus saved from failure. This was said at the same time to insure a saving for next year, because there were fewer failures this year and fewer children will have to repeat an entire year's work next year.

Macon, Ga., June 14.—The supreme court of Georgia will on Tuesday hear arguments in the cases of Gervis Bloodworth and Willie Jones, Taylor county youths under sentence of death for the murder of Howard F. Underwood, medicine salesman, according to Homer Beeland, of Roberta, Ga., counsel for the defense, who was here today.

Hunter Approach To Viaduct Will Be Opened Today

Hunter street approach to Spring street viaduct will be thrown open to traffic at sunrise this morning, it was announced Saturday by Chief of Construction William A. Hansell.

Completion of the approach is to be followed within two weeks by opening of Fairlie street into the railroad yards from Marietta street, the last improvement which is to be made with the $750,000 bond issue voted for the Spring street viaduct three years ago.

Work on the approach was held up for a period of months by injunction petitions filed by property owners along Hunter street to prevent the city from collecting a special tax assessment levied to buy the property used to widen Hunter to the width necessary for the approach. This delayed opening of the approach until exactly nine months after the main bridge from Marietta street to the Terminal station plaza was opened on September 15 of last year.

The approach rises from Forsyth street to the viaduct with two traffic ways, one on each side of an underpass into the railroad yards and freight terminals on Madison avenue.

PROMINENT MACONITE DIES AFTER ILLNESS

Macon, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—George T. Kershaw, retired Macon business man, died this morning at his home on Arlington place at the age of 72 years. He was born and reared in Mississippi, but had lived here for many years.

For many years, Mr. Kershaw was a member of the firm of Kershaw & Hill. Later he became connected with the McCaw Manufacturing company, which was absorbed by Procter & Gamble company, of Cincinnati, and following the merger he went to Cincinnati in charge of the sales department. He retired in 1918, and came back to Macon to live. He was active for a time with the Ross company, but two years ago gave up all active business work.

Mr. Kershaw is survived by his widow, a daughter, Mrs. John G. Ruan, of Macon, and one son, George T. Kershaw, Jr., of Hendersonville, North Carolina.

The body was taken to Charleston, S. C., tonight for funeral and interment.

HARDMAN GIVES VIEWS ON ROAD BOND ISSUE

Commerce, Ga., June 14.—(Special.) Dr. L. G. Hardman, of Commerce, who several days ago announced that he may be a candidate for governor, stated today that he has not yet made any definite decision. In answer to numerous requests urging him to enter the race and asking his views on various public projects, he issued the following statement:

"Perhaps the principle things that have engaged the attention of the people recently in the state is the matter of bond issues for public highways. I would like to say that I am heartily in favor of public highways, but I am opposed to burdening the state with a large bond issue at this time.

"However, we should provide a constructive program for development of our state, but it should not be all along one line. If we are to have a bond issue, I should favor, first, a $5,000,000 bond issue for construction of school buildings in the country counties of Georgia, which would be practically four buildings to the county.

"The basis of our state is her children, and if we wish to eliminate the many illiterates in Georgia, and lay the foundation for future citizens, we must take care of the country babies. In building up the country, we also are building up the cities.

"Secondly, I believe in a $5,000,000 bond issue for the purpose of providing and educating our teachers along every line of endeavor of our state, through the university and its branches. If we continue to develop our agricultural interest, we must continue to develop and teach them through the agricultural college and its branches. If we keep up the manufacturing branches of our state we must do it through the technological school.

"I also favor a $5,000,000 bond issue for the state highway, to be used especially for building country highways and connecting our school buildings; the cities having already built their highways."

DUBLIN ATTORNEY TO BE CANDIDATE FOR LEGISLATURE

Dublin, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—J. W. Harrell, of the law firm of Blackshear and Harrell, has announced his intention of running for the state legislature in the fall election. He will be a contestant for the place now held by H. B. Wimberly, who is serving his second term, and who has announced to succeed himself.

Laurens county has three representatives, the places now being held by S. P. New, H. B. Wimberly, and Ernest Clark. Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Clark state that they will offer for reelection. Mr. New has made no announcement.

According to rules of the local executive committee, all candidates must designate which place they are contesting for. Mr. Harrell is the first to announce, and states that he will oppose Representative Wimberly.

The Technical High school in Berlin, Germany, which looks like a palace, covers several acres of ground and has 5,000 students.

NEW TOKIO CHIEF RAPS DISORDERS

Tokio, June 14.—(By The Associated Press.)—A statement squarely opposing anti-American demonstrations as a means of expressing disapproval of the new United States immigration law barring Japanese, was issued today by Masahiro Ota, the new chief of the Tokio police bureau.

Ota is a political appointee and the statement was his first since installation under the new ministerial regime. It is regarded as an enunication of the new cabinet's policy regarding antiAmerican agitation.

"Incitement to violence and law breaking by means of anti-American demonstrations must be prevented," Ota declared. "Infringements of law will be strictly punished. We shall do our utmost to prevent rash or violent action due to public speeches or demonstration. The exclusion provision is too important to be treated rashly. Japanese must behave in a manner in keeping with the dignity of a great nation."

The boycott on American-made motion picture films, due to resentment because of the recently enacted bill excluding Japanese immigrants from America, has been brought to the attention of the Japanese government by the American embassy here.

The direct cause of the embassy's action was a complint from representatives of the American film companies at Kobe, who reported that the boycott movement was progressing in western Japan, and asked assistance in combatting it.

At the same time the boycott here is breaking down. Police have announced that full protection will be given any theater showing American-made films and have warned "patriots" as the most active supporters of the boycott term themselves, not to use intimidation as a weapon for gaining assent of the theater owners to plans to bar American pictures.

The leading Tokio theaters plan to continue using American films.

Washington, June 14.—Action of the American embassy in Tokio in calling attention of the Japanese government to the boycott of American films was said here today to have been taken, as is usual in such cases, on its own initiative. Reference of such procedure to the state department is not considered necessary.

MINE DISTRICT NO. 17 SUSPENDED BY UNION

Indianapolis, June 14.—The autonomy of district No. 17 of the United Mine Workers of America, which includes practically all of West Virginia, was suspended by the international executive board of the union today, and Percy Tetlow, of Ohio, was named head of the district by John L. Lewis, international president of the miners. Headquarters of Tetlow will be established in Charleston, W. Va., and he announced that Van A. Bittner, of Pittsburg, international representative, would be placed in charge of the northern part of the district with headquarters at Fairmont.

The order is effective June 16.

That policies of the international union have not been applied and enforced with sufficient vigor in district No. 17 is given as the reason for the suspension. It also was explained that all of the district and sub-district officers of the union in West Virginia appeared before the executive board and filed a petition asking that the international union assume charge.

Union policies hereafter will be pursued vigorously in West Virginia and "differences of opinion among the former district officials, resulting in conditions menacing to the union will be eliminated," it was announced at union headquarters.

The couple drove in the motor car of the bride's mother to West Point, Ga., yesterday, where they were married by a justice of the peace. They returned here today and made known their marriage.

Some months ago the young couple made a previous attempt to elope, but were detained by police in Phenix City, Ala., on orders from the local police department, until Mr. Hill arrived to bring his daughter back home.

BOARD OF VISITORS TURNS IN REPORT.

Athens, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—"The amount of $20,000 is needed for the remaining calendar year of 1924, and $40,000 for the calendar year of 1925," read the annual report of the board of visitors, submitted to the board of trustees of the University of Georgia today. "Unless these funds are secured, the present high standard of our state university cannot be maintained."

The board praises very highly the class of work being done in university class rooms "without additional space or physical equipment and with too few teachers." It points out that the university is caring for more students than its capacity now warrants, and recommends a dormitory for women and a physics building.

The appaointment of a dean of men was recommended, "whose sole business shall be to keep in direct personal touch with the young men students." A public speaking instructor and a music director for the university also were asked for.

The board takes occasion to praise Dr. Andrew M. Soule, president of the state college of agriculture, and his associates, for the high standard of efficiency maintained at the college and the service it has rendered, "which is proving of great economic value to the state of Georgia." Recommendation that Dr. Soule's budget be adopted in full was made. Mention was made of "Camp Wilkins," where Georgia boys will enjoy themselves while taking short agricultural courses every summer and this step praised.

The board of visitors is composed of Raymond I. Knox, Jackson; Miss Mae Michael, Monroe and Hawkinsville; M. L. Parker, College Park; Paul J. King, Stone Mountain; M. D. Collins, Fairburn.

Many foods, good to the eye and to the palate, are so soft and creamy that they lull the gums to sleep, as it were, and fail to give them that blood-rousing stimulation that rougher, coarser foods once gave.

How soft foods ruin the health of your teeth and gums

RESEARCHES prove that we, as a nation, give more attention to our teeth than any other people in the world.

And yet in spite of this, and in spite of the fact that our dental profession is far the superior of any other, the advance of oral hygiene is discouragingly slow.

General tooth health is not increasing. Troubles of the gingiva (gum structure) seem to be on the rise.

Undoubtedly the lack of hard physical work and the nervous tension of modern life are partly to blame, but the greatest foe to the health of your teeth and your gums is the food that you eat. For it does not stimulate the gums.

How Ipana protects the health of your gums

THIS modern food of ours may be delicious, but it's soft. It does not give the brisk exercise that rough, coarse food once gave. It does not stir your gums to health.

Probably you eat it hastily. That, too, cheats the gums of exercise, of stimulation.

Gums become soft and pampered. The toothbrush begins to "show pink." And then follows that train of tooth troubles showing such an alarming rate of increase today—those troubles whose source is a weakened gum structure, and whose course, if unchecked, leads straight from gingivitis to pyorrhea.

Recognizing the great need for fighting troubles of the gums, thousands of dentists now use and prescribe Ipana Tooth Paste. Many practitioners have written us that in especially stubborn cases of bleeding gums, they prescribe a thorough daily massage of the gums with Ipana after the regular brushing with Ipana.

How Ipana helps to build sound gum tissue

For in strengthening soft gums and healing bleeding gums, Ipana has a specific virtue. It contains ziratol, a positive antiseptic and germicide, and a preparation with a recognized hemostatic value. Throughout the country ziratol is used by dentists, after extraction, to allay the bleeding of the wound, to heal infected tissue and to restore to irritated and congested gums their normal tonicity. Indeed, Ipana, in the relatively short time that it has been before the profession, has proved itself to be the great enemy of the "pink toothbrush."

Try a tube of Ipana today

If your gums have a tendency to be soft or to bleed, go to the drug store today and buy your first tube of Ipana. Before you have finished using it, you cannot fail to note the improvement. And you will be delighted with its fine, grit-free consistency, its delicious flavor and its clean taste.

Harris Formally Announces For Reelection To Senate

Senator William J. Harris, senior senator from Georgia in the United States senate, has formally announced his candidacy to succeed himself. Although it has been generally known that he would offer for reelection formal, definite announcement was not forthcoming until Saturday afternoon.

Rumors have been current for several weeks that Senator Harris would be opposed, names of a number of prominent Georgians having been mentioned as probable candidates for the toga. Prominent among these is Chief Justice Richard B. Russell, of the state supreme court. The name of former Governor Hardwick also has been mentioned. Thus far, however, no opposition has developed.

Senator Harris is now serving his first term and sets out in his formal announcement outstanding features of his six years' service in the senate. He reviews his record thoroughly, going into detail in many instances in order to make a clear statement of his full service while representing his state.

Senator Harris' announcement in full follows:

To the People of Georgia:

Six years ago you did me the honor of electing me to the United States senate. In announcing as a candidate for relection to this high office it seems appropriate that I should call attention briefly to some of the things I have been able to do in spite of the fact that the republicans have had substantial majorities in both the senate and house.

My candidacy is based solely on my record of accomplishments, which I hope has merited your approval.

Realizing that our farmers, laborers, manufacturers and merchants were in need of substantial assistance I have spent my time laboring for them in a constructive way, rather than making partisan political speeches. I have worked in harmony with my colleagues in the senate and have had the cordial support of the Georgia members of congress in all that I have accomplished for our people. While I have interested myself in all general legislation, I have allowed nothing to prevent me from giving special attention to matters, large and small, that would in any way help the people of Georgia.

On Many Committees.

It is well-known that nearly all legislation is framed in committees, and I am fortunate in being next to the ranking democrat on the committee on appropriations, the most important of all committees. No other legislative committee in the world controls appropriations for such large amounts. I am also the only member from the southeast on the subcommittees of eight members each that handle all appropriations for agriculture, commerce, good roads, postoffices, rural routes, rivers and harbors, military posts, hospitals, labor and interior departments, in which the people of Georgia are vitally interested.

At the time of my nomination and election in 1918 our brave boys were fighting in the greatest and most destructive war of all history. While they, in cooperation with our allies, were slowly but surely driving back the Germans, thousands of the flower of young American manhood were daily sacrificing their lives for our country and humanity, I promised you then that I would do everything in my power to help win the war and get our boys back home. I went to France when the war closed, at my own expense, to see about the health and comfort of the Georgia soldiers and there arranged for many of them to come home before the soldiers of other states. I was the only senator to do this. It has been my privilege to render assistance to thousands of veterans during and since demobilization. I also helped to amend a bill so that one of the five big hospitals could be located in Augusta, Ga.

I have supported woman suffrage and prohibition and have at all times been on the moral side of every public question.

Immigration Views.

No senator has taken deeper interest in the matter of immigration. During my first year in the senate I introduced a bill prohibiting all immigration for at least five years and have consistently urged the passage of such a measure, both in the committee on immigration, of which I am a member, and on the floor of the senate. While I failed in my efforts to stop altogether the flow of foreigners to our shores, I was honored by being designated as one of the five conferees from the senate to meet with the five house members and took an active part in framing the new immigration law, which is by far the best the congress has ever passed.

After the war came reconstruction with the terrible financial crisis to the farmers, upon whom all our people must depend for prosperity. I am a member of the farm bloc and am confident the Record will show that no senator has worked harder or accomplished more for the farmer than I have during the last five years.

Among the measures for the benefit of the farmer that I originated or actively supported, and have been largely instrumental in passing, may be mentioned the following:

Stopping the discrimination against Georgia hog raisers by the meat packers' trust, which controls the price of hogs. Four years of investigation by the agricultural department, at my urgent request, has proved the injustice of the claim by the packers that Georgia-raised hog meat was inferior because peanut-fed hogs were soft and oily. My work in this line saves Georgia hog raisers millions annually.

Active for Farmers.

Amending the law so that Georgia farm products could be stored in federal licensed warehouses, of which there are over two hundred in Georgia, and thus secure cheaper interest and insurance rates.

Changing government reports of estimates of cotton acreage, amount ginned, etc., to prevent Wall street gamblers speculating in cotton.

Persuading President Wilson not to fix the price of cotton, which later sold as high as 45 cents. Northern and western senators urged him to fix the price at 18 cents a pound, which would have meant a loss of millions to Georgia farmers.

Including calcium arsenate in the bill which passed the senate last year appropriating $10,000,000 as a revolving fund to buy nitrate of soda to sell to farmers at cost.

Appropriating $125,000 for market news service so the farmers of our section could find, without expense, markets for their products.

Appropriating funds for and locating in Georgia pecan and peach experimental stations, the only stations of the kind in the United States.

Reducing parcel post rates on farm products, such as eggs, butter, vegetables, etc. My bill has passed the senate and is now on the house calendar.

Arranging with the secretary of agriculture to notify farmers daily by radio of the price of cotton.

Boll Weevil Fight.

Appropriating $500,000 additional for boll weevil work, $36,000 of which is for experiments in developing cheaper processes for the manufacture of calcium arsenate and other poisons; $15,000 for investigations by the United States geological survey to determine the various sources of arsenic ores for making calcium arsenate and $25,000 for experiments by the chemical welfare service in poison gases to kill the boll weevil. Last year I secured $50,000 for this purpose.

Appropriating $5,000 additional for tobacco investigations by the Georgia coastal plain experiment station at Tifton; $10,000 for study of storing pecans and cane syrup in bonded federal warehouses under my amendment broadening the warehouse law, and $5,000 for study of more effective and profitable utilization of the rapidly increasing production of peaches in Georgia through packing and canning.

Appropriating $10,000 for a new branch office of the United States foreign and domestic commerce bureau in Atlanta to find foreign markets for our merchandise and agricultural products.

Preventing oriental oils from flooding our markets and competing with Georgia peanuts and cotton seed oils.

Opposed Mellon Plan.

I have worked and voted to place the burden of taxation on those most able to bear it. I opposed that part of Secretary Mellon's plan which reduced the taxes twice as much on large incomes as on small incomes. Two years ago Secretary Mellon opposed my amendment fixing a lower tax rate on earned incomes or incomes derived from wages, professional service, etc., than on incomes from bonds and not from work.

The republicans at that time voted it down, but this year Secretary Mellon recommended my plan and it became a law. I favored lowering the taxes far more than Secretary Mellon and I urged exempting married men whose incomes were less than $5,000. I also urged an amendment that would have relieved from payment of any income about 75 per cent of all the people of Georgia who now pay income tax. When the sixteenth amendment of the constitution was passed it was intended to collect taxes on large incomes only.

A majority of all Georgia banks are small and under the original law could not be members and secure cheap interest rates of federal reserve system banks. I made the fight to change the law for these country banks and now they can get all advantages of large city banks.

When gasoline was selling cheaper in northern states than in Georgia I introduced a measure, which passed the senate, preventing discrimination in price of gasoline.

One of the first things I did after my election to the senate was to urge the changing of the southeastern headquarters of the army, then at Charleston, S. C., to Atlanta, the logical place. This brings to Georgia more than a million dollars a year.

Fought High Rates.

I opposed the Esch-Cummins railroad bill which advanced freight and passenger fares, and have worked hard for reduction of rates.

A bill of mine recently passed the senate preventing wooden cars from being placed between steel passenger cars. It will save the lives of many passengers.

An amendment of mine forced the president to name three democrats, one of whom is Judge Crisp, a Georgian, on the United States debt commission to collect amounts due us by European governments.

The federal government spends more money in Georgia than in any other southern state, which helps our people. While I believe in economy in government expenditures and in keeping down taxes, I have done all I could to secure appropriations for worthy measures in my state.

Respectfully yours,
(Signed) WILLIAM J. HARRIS.

Mothers!! Apply Common Sense

THIS is the era of the prevention of disease and sensible people do not wait until sickness has actually come before remedying the trouble. The crowded hospitals everywhere are sad examples of the results of neglect. Be especially watchful of children. Restlessness, lack of normal appetite and feverishness usually indicate constipation. Stop it that instant with a spoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will have prevented real sickness. Mrs. Ida Williamson of 1637 Pine St., Long Beach, Cal. and Mrs. Lou Brawley of Self, Ark., never have illness in the family because of their prompt use of Syrup Pepsin.

A Great Family Laxative

It may be difficult to decide just what medicine to use out of the many that are offered, but it would not be if you knew the facts. There are laxatives, cathartics, purgatives and physics, and they vary in their reaction on the system. Naturally, the stronger the medicine the more it shocks the system, so wise parents never give anything but a laxative to children. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a mild laxative, a vegetable compound of Egyptian senna with pepsin and desirable aromatics, and so appreciated that it is now the largest selling preparation of its kind in the world, over 10 million bottles being used annually. The formula is on every package.

Three Rules of Health

Purchase a bottle of Syrup Pepsin at a drug store and always keep one in the family medicine chest. Give it to anyone from infant to grandparent, for it is safe, and the cost is less than a cent a dose. You can keep a family healthy with just this simple medicine. Give it for constipation, torpid liver, indigestion, biliousness, headaches, colds and other evidence of bowel obstruction. Dr. Caldwell, who was a practicing physician for 47 years and who originated this formula, had three rules of health that he found very effective among his patients and which you can follow with great benefit: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, and the bowels open.

Memorial Work Is Progressing, Officials Say

Work on the Stone Mountain memorial is progressing under protection of the restraining order issued last Tuesday by Judge John B. Hutcheson, of the Stone Mountain circuit, according to a statement issued Saturday by the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental association.

"Work on the memorial is going right along under protection of the order issued by Judge Hutcheson restraining Samuel H. Venable from interfering with the electric power line, the compressed air line and the steps leading up the mountain to the carving," the statement declares.

"The whole object of the court proceeding was to enable the association to keep on with the work. So far from halting the work, the court proceeding did just the opposite.

"In the present stage, the work on the mountain consists of preliminary carving on the heads of President Jefferson Davis and General Stonewall Jackson, and of the removal of granite in the great area between General Lee and President Davis. Both these lines of work are going along well. The size of this area is large enough to permit use of explosives under direction of an expert.

"While the work goes forward on the mountain, the association's plans for the Stone Mountain Memorial half-dollar are also developing rapidly. The finished models for both sides of the half-dollar were submitted this week to the director of the mint in Washington and approved by him. We hope to get the first coins from the mint at a very early date.

"Orders for Stone Mountain Memorial half-dollars are pouring into memorial headquarters by every mail. They are coming from individuals, banks and patriotic organizations all over the country. There is no doubt whatever that these coins are going to sell with great rapidity the moment that are put on sale. The revenue derived from them will absolutely insure the success of the memorial.

"We have just received a 'founders' roll' subscription of $1,000 from H. B. Spencer, prominent citizen of Washington, D. C., in memory of his father, the late Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern railway, who fought as a boy in the Confederate army, and who was one of the great railway executives of the south in the period when development got under way in this section after reconstruction. Mr. Spencer was killed in a railroad wreck. His monument stands on the plaza in front of the terminal station in Atlanta."

1,500 TOBACCO GROWERS AT COBBTOWN MEETING

Reidsville, Ga., June 14.—(Special.) Nearly 1500 tobacco growers of Tattnall, Evans, Toombs and Candler counties met today at Cobbtown to discuss plans for marketing the tobacco crops. Representatives of the larger warehouses in this section were present, and several made addresses on tobacco growing and marketing, the principal speaker being Jap McDanald, of Douglas.

Local growers entertained with a barbecue dinner and a trip over the tobacco crops near town.

Forsyth Stores Close.

Forsyth, Ga., June 14.—(Special.) Forsyth enjoyed its first half-holiday Thursday, and stores will be closed Thursdays during June, July and August, to enable those confined in stores and offices "to obey their wives' orders to work in the garden," as one storekeeper remarked.

New Peach Industry Gains Prominence in Macon County

Down in Macon county, where a large proportion of Georgia's famous peaches are grown, has been developed a new industry, with an important income producing capacity this year. The story of this new industrial development for Georgia was brought to Atlanta Saturday by George M. Chastain, vice president of the Georgia State bank of Montezuma, county seat of Macon county.

Macon county people have established four plants for the making of commercial peach juice. According to Mr. Chastain, there is a constant market for this product in big cities of the east and north, and plants in Macon county are already assured of a market for their full capacity production throughout the season.

Total capacity of all four plants is 25 tons of peaches per day. The peaches are crushed and it is estimated by the chemical engineer who has supervised installation of the plants one bushel of first-grade peaches will make one and one-half gallons of plain peach juice. The juice is sold in two conditions, plain and concentrated at a price said to be highly satisfactory to the peach growers.

Many By-Products.

The juice is used for canning purposes, for making jams and jellies, for flavoring extracts and for making soft drinks. The by-products, after the juice has been taken out, are almost as valuable as the juice itself. The meat of the peach is made into what is known as a "cold pack," which keeps fresh indefinitely and is used for making tomato paste and Then there is also a pulp by-product, from which peach butter is made. By addition of other fruit juices, such as blackberry, marmalades are made. The seed is also used, the kernels giving prussic acid and almond paste. The seeds are then put through machinery, which transforms them into a high-grade filtering charcoal, with still another valuable by-product in the form of an important chemical gas.

After the peach season is over, the same machinery and plants will be used for makin gtomato paste and asparagus paste, used in soups.

This new development is pioneer work for Georgia, says Mr. Chastain. It is already proven a profitable enterprise in Macon county and holds promise as a big revenue-producer for the state in the near future.

Georgia Has Monopoly.

Mr. Chastain states that Georgia should almost have a monopoly of this industry, inasmuch as J. A. Russell, chemical engineer in charge of all Macon county plants, states that the California peach is too dry and has not enough sugar to be used successfully in this way.

In Montezuma there are thee of these plants, one a co-operatively-owned enterprise known as the Montezuma Fruit Products company; one is operated by McKenzie Brothers, and the third, not yet quite completed, is being erected by a New York concern, the Atlantic Orchards corporation.

Mr. Chastain, besides the prominent place he holds as a banker, is a leader in civic life in Montezuma and is enthusiastic about the new wealth which he sees coming to his community.

Party of Georgians Visit

:: LEARN NEED OF LAW ENFORCEMENT ::

State's Big Fish Hatchery

BY RALPH T. JONES.

Few Georgians know anything about one of the most fascinating undertakings which Uncle Sam has located in Georgia—the federal fish hatchery at Warm Springs. No more interesting and beautiful establishment can be found than this, and but few which are doing so valuable a work for the conservation and protection of the God-given natural resources which have made America the richest nation of the globe.

Some weeks ago, Peter S. Twitty, state commissioner of game and fish, led a party of visitors to this hatchery, where Charles A. Bullock, superintendent, was met. Mr. Bullock is a man who has devoted his life to the study of fish and their habits. He is one of the leading authorities in the United States on his own subject and he proved a fascinating talker on the subject he knows as an expert.

The hatchery is located about one mile from the town of Warm Springs. Its postoffice used to be Bullochville—not named after the superintendent. That is merely a coincidence. Recently, however, the postoffice has been discontinued as Bullochville and the mail is handled through the Warm Springs office.

Many Pond Sections.

There are between 25 and 30 ponds in which bass and bream at the hatchery are kept. Dotted over a glowing green landscape, with glorious old shade trees spreading graceful boughs above, these ponds make a wonderfully beautiful picture, their rippling surface speckled with the shadows of the trees and the tinted reflection of the sunshine.

We learned a lot about fish through talking to Superintendent Bullock—and we also heard a lot of hard truths about Georgia customs and laws regarding wild game and game fish. Uncomplimentary truths, but it is good to understand just wherein we fail for only through honest criticism can we learn how to improve. Commissioner Twitty and the legislative committee on game and fish, by the way, will introduce a new bill for the protection of the fish and game of the state this year. This bill is the joint work of the committee and it is believed, if it is passed, that at least some of the grounds for Mr. Bullock's criticism will be removed.

Habits of Bream.

Did you know that a bream lays its eggs in a nest, like a hen? Its true. The male fish makes the nest by pushing away the surface sand from a spot on the bottom of the pond, forces the female to deposit her egys there, fertilizes them and then guards them until they hatch and the baby fish are big enough to be left to their own devices. After the eggs are once laid the male drives the female away from the nest and guards it himself. We saw one or two swimming slowly above their nests, darting out from time to time to drive away other fish which came too close for comfort.

One of the important things wrong with Georgia treatment of these fish, we were told, is that there is no closed season and fishermen go out and catch the adults by the hundreds during the breeding season. As a result, our lakes and streams are fast being depleted of fish. As Mr. Bullock pointed out, the fishermen will destroy thousands of females in the spring, then beg the hatchery to send fingerlings for restocking. The best the hatchery can do, he says, is to send a fraction of the offspring of one female for restocking. He likened it, with justice, to the action of a poultryman who killed off all his laying and setting hens, then expected his neighbors to furnish him with a few setting eggs, and keep up his flock of hens by this method, practiced every year. Or to a cattle raiser who expected to see his herds increase, but who killed off all his cows when they were with calf.

Defects In Laws.

According to Mr. Bullock there are six fatal defects with the present fish laws of the state. He lists these as follows: First, there is no restriction as to fishing for game fish during the season they are reproducing; second, there is no limit fixed by statute on the number of fish that can be taken daily by the individual; third, there is no limit as to how small a fish can be taken and kept; fourth, there is practically no restriction as to seining. The present county law is a joke; fifth, the present law against dynamiting or poisoning with lime or otherwise is but equivalent to a slap on the wrist; sixth, with an offender arrested and proven guilty there is far too low a limit set as to the punishment, a too lenient or lax judge may mete out.

Mr. Bullock recommends a closed season on fishing while the fish are reproducing. He suggests two months—from April 12 to June 12, but says it would be better to extend this period to July 1. When a fisherman catches 100 adult fish during this period, he says it means a potential loss to the state of 100,000 young fish.

Next, he would limit the number of fish any individual may catch during one day to about 10 adult bass, or 20 bream or catfish, or not to exceed 30 of all species combined. He would, of course, allow exceptions near the coast, where commercial fisheries are located, and in certain muddy waters where catfish are caught for the market.

Then he would require all fish caught below a certain minimum size to be put back immediately into the water. his to assure at least one year of reproduction for each fish. He suggests as suitable minimum sizes for Georgia, 10 1-2 inches for bass, 6 inches for bream and mountain trout, 7 inches for catfish and 8 inches for rainbow trout.

Another law he advocates is one prohibiting catching of fish by seining, poisoning, dynamiting, or other means except pole and line. This also carries the exceptions applied to the maximum daily catch proposal, for the coast regions and the commercial catfish waters.

Mr. Bullock also urges a proper law for enforcement of the fish and game legislation. He would make wardens salaried officers, and fix the license law so as to provide an income to cover all expenses and leave a far greater excess to the state than is secured now.

Experienced In Work.

Mr. Bullock has spent 23 years as a fish and game expert of the federal government. This work has been done in six different states and as the result of his observation he knows the experiences of other states. He warns Georgians that the state's supply of game fish, of deer, of fur bearing animals, of small game and of birds is fast being exterminated through lack of adequate laws and their enforcement. He points out the resultant loss of millions of annual revenue to the state, and the uncountable loss in natural wealth. He shows the way by which the situation may be remedied. It is strictly up to Georgians to remedy this glaring defect.

Commissioner of game and fish, Peter S. Twitty, is doing his utmost to improve these startling evils. But he will need the cooperation of every hunter, every angler, every voter and every citizen if Georgia is to be saved from becoming the only state in the union entirely barren of fish, game, birds, etc.

In conclusion, think about one startling fact which Mr. Bullock holds up to our shame. The only bird in Georgia which is protected from the hunter by the laws all the year 'round is the buzzard. And the buzzard is the cause of more loss to the state than any living creature, except man. For one buzzard, after feeding off the carcass of a diseased hog, can spread the germs of hog cholera over 50 counties in a week.—a far greater evil than the dreaded foot and mouth disease against which California and Arizona took such drastic precautions this year.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

The board of directors of the Atlanta Urban League were highly pleased with the report of the work accomplished in the months of April and May, covering the activities of the free employment bureau and the Opportunity school, that was presented by the director at the regular monthly meeting Tuesday afternoon, June 10. The report in part is as follows:

Number applied for work	242
Number applied for help	90
Number referred	246
Number accepted	151

Of the number accepted 32 went to the Biltmore hotel and rendered excellent service. Several of the hall maids previously sent to the Biltmore have been transferred to parlors, they were so efficient and made a splendid impression.

Nine trained for elevator work.

Twenty-five trained for waitress work.

New avenues are opening daily for our people. Ten young women were sent to Dermis Kura hairdressing establishment for canvassing. One very efficient operator has been placed at Poro hairdressing parlor.

L. L. Craig, supervisor of the free employment agency, spoke to the Atlanta district convention concerning employment agency and Opportunity school which met with ready response. She also spoke to trustees of Atlanta Baptist Preparatory school, most of whom are ministers and who promised their hearty co-operation.

H. T. McGrew, director of the Opportunity school, spoke to the members of Wheat Street Missionary society concerning the school. All present expressed themselves as being much pleased and anxiously waiting the opening of the school.

The Busy Merry-Makers club, a group of young women, most of whom have been placed by the Urban League free employment bureau, has organized and meets weekly at the Y. W. C. A. Some of the functions of this club are to make welcome the strangers and maintain a friendly relationship among the girls who go out from our employment agency as a means of keeping the league in touch with their activities on the one hand, spread information that the league trains prospective employees and places them in jobs and positions on the other.

The Opportunity school opened Monday, June 2. June 3, Tuesday, dinner was served to 23 ministers. June 4, Wednesday, was the formal opening of the school, we had 56 visitors. We also served dinner to the Independent staff. Throughout the week we served meals. Since the opening of the school we have served 200 people, including 41 A. M. E. ministers. The girls in the cooking class have cooked and served the meals. The enrollment of the school at present is 45. We are teaching cooking, serving, tea room waiting, tea room management, basketry and flower making.

Forty-one members of A. M. E. Ministers' union were entertained at and by the Opportunity school, Tuesday, June 10. Most of the active pastors of the A. M. E. church of the Atlanta district were in attendance. Bishops Flipper and Fountain were also in the delegation. The union, through Rev. J. T. Hall, commended the Urban League for its work on behalf of increasing the mechanical and industrial efficiency of the negro wage-earner.

A week or two ago the Baptist ministers were the invited guests of the Urban League Opportunity school. They were equally as profuse in their expressions of sanction and appreciation.

For the first time in the history of the work in the southern region there will be a camp for colored girls. This camp will be under the auspices of the Phyllis Wheatley branch and will open June 24 and continue for the month. The camp will be located on Grant farm, about 12 miles from the city, on the Stone Mountain car line. Mrs. Toby Grant is furnishing the grounds free of charge and the Chest makes it possible for the camp to be conducted at a minimum cost to the girls. The rates will be three dollars a week and each group of 20 girls will be limited to two weeks at the camp. The association is furnishing competent chaperonage, medical attention and excellent food. Fresh vegetables and country meats will be secured from the farm, as will plenty of fruits and fresh milk. The girls are expected to furnish bed things, toilet articles, etc., good will and the desire to have the best time of their lives. There is a registration fee of one dollar, which will be deducted from the weekly rate. This fee is due on or before June 16. The camp is open to girls over 12 years of age. Mail or bring your registration fee to the camp chairman, W. F. McKinney, 196 Piedmont avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

The annual June meeting of Girls' Reserves will be held at Liberty Baptist church, Sunday afternoon, June 15, at 3 o'clock. Convention delegates will speak. High school girls will present "Pygmalion and Galatea." The public is cordially invited.

New Dredge at Savannah.

Savannah, Ga., June 14.—The Dan C. Kingman, a new ultra modern dredge coming to Savannah in August, probably will be stationed here permanently, according to an announcement from authoritive sources. Capt. Z. B. Greer, of the dredge Cumberland, will command the new dredge.

$125,000 To Be Spent To Repair Rome Bank; Work Already Started

Constitution Bureau, Masonic Temple Annex, Phone 1690.

Rome, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—Officers of the First National bank, which is now being remodeled, announced Friday that the three upper floors of the building also will be remodeled as a modern office building, at an expenditure of approximately $50,000. The first floor of the building is now being rebuilt at a cost of approximately $75,000. This is one of the finest buildings in Rome, but because of lack of facilities, the three upper floors have not been entirely occupied. Harvey-Given Real Estate company is handling the leasing contracts, and already 60 per cent of the office space has been leased.

Charles Blackstock, of Rome, has the general contract for remodeling the building, while C. E. Frazier, of Atlanta, is the architect. Work will begin about July 1.

Langley to Convention.

Rome, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—Lee Langley, Rome representative in the legislature, has received notice from Cordell Hull, chairman of the national democratic committee, that he will be issued a ticket to the democratic convention to be held in New York City this month. Mr. Langley has been active in the seventh district in raising money for the national committee, and has rendered the party other services.

Rum Runners Trapped.

Rome, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—"Buck" and Dick Salmon, of Armuchee, both well known in Rome, were arrested last night, charged with having two gallons of corn whisky in their car. Police had received a "tip" that the two young men had liquor in the car and would deliver it to a party here during the night. Officers surprised the men near here, and caught them when the liquor car was stopped by running into a fence.

They were taken to Floyd county jail, and each made cash bond for $750. The new car will be confiscated.

GAS EXPERIMENTS ON BOLL WEEVIL MADE IN GEORGIA

Washington, June 14.—(Special.) Some of the experiments in poison gas to kill the cotton boll weevil, under the direction of the war department, will be made in Georgia. Senator W. J. Harris, who secured the appropriation of $25,000 to carry on the experiments, conferred today with the army officials, who have already been at work. Last year Senator Harris secured $50,000 for the poison gas trials in fighting the cotton pest.

JOHN ROSS ELECTED LEADER OF SEEDSMEN

John Ross, of Memphis, was elected president of the Southern Seedsmen's association at the closing session Saturday of the sixth annual convention, which has been in session for the past three days at Hotel Ansley. Mr. Ross succeeds H. G. Hastings, of Atlanta, who has been head of the association for several years. Mr. Ross was formerly vice president. R. A. Cohen was named vice president of the association for the ensuing year, and Frank Love, of Birmingham, was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

At the conclusion of the business session delegates to the convention and their friends were carried in automobiles to the Hastings farm, near Jonesboro, where they were treated to a barbecue in southern style. Entertainment was provided by local talent.

A number of seedsmen, headed by H. G. Hastings, W. I. Hastings and R. F. Lyons, of Atlanta, will leave this morning for Chicago where they will attend the national convention of the American Seed Trade association, which opens there next week.

200th Infantry Campaign For Recruits Draws to End

During the past six weeks' drive for recruits for the 200th infantry, national guard regiment, more than 150 new men have been added to the first and second battalions, according to announcement Saturday by Lieutenant Colonel Eugene Oberdorfer, in charge of the campaign. "These figures are unofficial," he said, "but final compilation of records is not expected to reduce that figure."

The drive, intensified during the past 10 days by closeness of competing teams in the campaign and uncertainty of winners of handsome trophies to be awarded, has not only boosted the spirit in the organization but has resulted in the addition of capable and stalwart young men, officers of the regiment state, many of whom have had previous military service.

Coincident with the campaign for recruits has been the concerted efforts of officers of the several companies to enlist the support of business men and employers of the city to the extent that arrangements be made for employees who are members of the outfit to attend the annual camp on St. Simon island. Although members of the regiment may be forced to attend the camp, officers are loth to work unnecessary hardships on employees or employers when more satisfactory arrangements may be made in advance. With this in view, it is pointed out, employers of men in the regiment have been approached and given the facts with the hope that arrangements for men to attend camp will be made sufficiently in advance as to avoid embarrassment at the last moment.

Oberdorfer Praised.

Colonel Charles H. Cox, commanding officer of the regiment, has made it known that he will insist upon full attendance at the camp and has instructed officers to proceed with camp plans accordingly. The camp begins August 17 and continues for two weeks.

Commenting Saturday on the manner in which Colonel Oberdorfer has handled the drive for recruits, Colonel Cox said:

"The campaign has been a splendid success and reflects no little credit upon Colonel Oberdorfer. He has had splendid cooperation in the drive."

"The campaign ends Monday night," Colonel Oberdorfer said, "and we are well satisfied with results. Many of the new men are members of Atlanta's best families. They appreciate the value of military instruction.

LIEUT. COL. EUGENE OBERDORFER.

Combined with the training is the avenue for wholesome recreation, amusements of various kind and the annual two weeks camp. The camp this year, beginning August 17, promises to be one of the most successful and enjoyable in many years," he continued.

Colonel Oberdorfer, prominent in insurance circles of the city, has spent much of his time away from his office during the past three weeks in personal work in connection with the regiment's drive for new recruits.

Winners of awards in the recruit campaign will be announced Monday night following the regular drill period, Colonel Oberdorfer states.

MRS. WHITE ALLOWED TO SIGN HER OWN BOND

Mrs. O. L. White, 27, of 132 Pulliam street, who shot and wounded Mrs. A. L. Gasden, of Chamblee, last Saturday afternoon as the result of the latter's alleged attentions to Mrs. White's husband, Saturday was bound over to the state court under a charge of assault with intent to murder. Mrs. Gasden was given a fine of $16 by the recorder on a charge of disorderly conduct. Mrs. White was allowed to sign her own bond.

The affair took place Saturday afternoon, June 7, on Broad street near Hunter, when Mrs. White discovered Mrs. Gasden engaged in conversation with her husband, O. L. White. After a heated argument between the two women, Mrs. White drew a small pistol and fired at Mrs. Gasden, inflicting a slight wound in her shoulder.

Mrs. White, when arraigned before Recorder George E. Johnson Saturday, related a long and pathetic story of 18 months of unhappy life, the result, she said, of Mrs. Gasden's undue attentions to her husband. The woman, Mrs. White declared, had already been arrested twice at her request, and had been put on probation in both cases after she had agreed to cease her attentions to White.

A case of disorderly conduct against White was dismissed by the recorder. Yen B. Guillebeau represented Mrs. White.

REPUBLICAN SPLIT GETS EAR OF COOLIDGE

to rush back here and try to straighten matters out.

One of the first steps in this direction was the president's invitation to Senator Smoot, of Utah, and Frank W. Mondell, who was permanent chairman of the convention, to accompany him on a week-end Mayflower cruise.

To Tame Butler Down.

From them the president will hear more of the inside convention story, and it is probable that he will discuss with them plans for patching up some sort of unity in the organization.

While it is hardly likely that Coolidge will seriously consider ousting Butler, it is probable that he will insist that Butler change his attitude and act as a leader rather than a dictator. Coolidge would suffer great embarrassment by removing Butler. He has known and worked with Butler for years, and to remove him now would be to confess that he had exercised bad judgment in the selection of his campaign manager.

There is the possibility also that the antagonism developing between Butler and Slemp may sooner or later bring an explosion.

Campaign to Limp.

Rarely has a man in such a powerful position as Butler's made so many enemies in so short a time. He was the most unapproachable man at the convention. He did not consult with other leaders at the convention. He merely issued orders. This irritated leaders who for years have had a hand in shaping the party's national affairs. They rebelled at being made errand boys. They got their revenge several fold.

Looking ahead to the campaign, the first task of Coolidge is to force Butler to change his methods, and then to win back the enthusiasm of the other leaders. Until that has been done, the campaign cannot move forward with all cylinders hitting. Coolidge probably will take an opportunity to do this job quietly while public attention is riveted on the democratic convention in New York.

ROTARY APPEALS TO HELP SOLVE

hill and rests by the way before he goes down into the valley of the shadow, he may see that column of marchers traveling with greater speed, better order and fewer losses, by the work he has done to help them."

The problem of the unoccupied vacationing school boy is divided into three classes, says the appeal.

High School Boy.

First of these is the high school boy, whose next step in life is college or employment. Men who have jobs they might give to these boys are urged to do so, with the proviso that they let the boy know they are seeking to fit him to take their places when their production days are over.

The grammar school grades, it is said, present the problem of providing healthy recreation and the possibility of interesting work in some cases. It is urged that the fathers take advantage of the get-together spirit, or what was known in the old days as "the gang," instinct, with these boys. The older men are asked to furnish playgrounds for these boys, when the communities in which they live are remote from the public playgrounds; to stir up their interest in healthy amusement by competition for prizes, to enter into their sports whenever it is possible to thus help the boys. Many a community can solve the problem of mischievous boys by arranging a baseball diamond on a vacant lot and furnishing the necessary paraphernalia for the sport, it is urged. Then, if the fathers will take turns umpiring the games, the problems for that immediate neighborhood will be near solution.

Boys of Tender Age.

For the boys of tender age, who must stay near home, it is recommended that school or church grounds be used, where they can play under the direction of trained workers in child welfare. Thus, it is pointed out, the children will be helped to the best of enjoyment in the years before life's responsibilities have begun to bear upon them and at the same time their mothers will be given an opportunity for rest from the care of the little ones for a few hours each day.

"If the grown-ups, the boys' fathers, will give thought," the appeal concludes, "we feel they will take a little time from their busy lives to give to the world the greatest legacy they can leave behind them—their boys. We believe many who read this will say to themselves, 'I'll sure have to make a pal of that kid of mine.'" eleventh state, and that it had leased an auditorium where convention proceedings at the garden would be transmitted by radio to a large overflow audience.

ADVANCE GUARDS ARRIVE IN GOTHAM

Speculate on Chairman.

Much of the preconvention gossip centered on speculation as to who would be permanent chairman of the convention. The name of Senator Walsh, of Montana, was the most frequently mentioned. Homer S. Cummings, of Connecticut, former national chairman of the party, who is spoken of as a candidate for the presidential nomination, was reported to be slated for chairmanship of the committee on resolutions and platform. Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, already has been named keynote spokesman and temporary convention chairman.

Because of the abundance of candidates for the presidential nomination and an additional number of dark horses, the subcommittee on delegation seating is confronted by a difficult problem.

Some Preferred Customers.

Mr. Dockweiler pointed out that it was customary to give "up-front" seats to the state delegations with favorite sons. It is also customary to give prominent positions to the largest delegations, such as New York, with 98 members, Pennsylvania with 76, Illinois with 58, Ohio with 48, Texas with 40.

Fourteen states now have candidates in the race or almost in, and, according to Mr. Dockweiler, there will be at least eight dark horse entries when the nominating begins. Thus 20 of the 48 state delegations will be at least eight dark-horse. Add to these the big state delegations that customarily get places easily distinguishable to the convention chairman, and it appears that few of the units are going to be satisfied with rear seats.

No Seating Control.

Mr. Dockweiler, reported as McAdoo's slated floor manager, today characterized as "silly and ridiculous" a statement in a letter the Anti-Saloon League of New York sent delegates, yesterday, that "the Smith-Tammany-Underwood-Wall street crew" would control the assignment of places to the delegations.

"No candidate and no faction will dictate the seating," said Mr. Dockweiler. "The subcommittee of the national democratic committee, whose members favor various candidates, will make the assignments."

STATE UNIVERSITY MUST HAVE MONEY

ed a great advancement in many respects, and the students stand high in their classes; and the university will in future years be proud of the record that these students will make in the different vocations into which they may enter."

The board sets out that the heads of the various departments and the chancellor were conferred with during the inspection of the school last December and concur in the decision. In connection with female students, it points out the need of more dormitory space for them. It declares that the affairs of the university are being administered "economically," and is "not prepared to point out any matter where expenses could be lessened under existing conditions."

The need of a central heating plant, an increase in funds for building up the law school library as a necessity to maintain that school on a footing with others in the state, are included in the board's recommendations.

Chancellor Barrow Lauded.

The board directs attention to the work of Chancellor David C. Barrow, who, it points out, "has shown a spirit of altruism in the development of the university by assuming large responsibilities financially, in the extension and acquirement of properties that were necessary for the extension of the university." The committee states that when some of its members came upon the board, the property of the university consisted of the old campus, which embraced about thirty-seven acres. Largely through the chancellor's work and endeavor, it has now over 1,100 acres, and has acquired the present law school building largely through his efforts.

"In the last twenty years," the report continues, "the university has been increased from an attendance of 408 students during the session of 1905-06 to an enrollment of about 1,700 at this time. Many departments have been added within this period, along with the admission of women to the different schools of the university. There are now about 180 female students and also there has been added a department of commerce, school of journalism, school of pharmacy, and extensions in other directions. The teaching force has been more than doubled; at the same time the state has not added a single new building during that time."

GEORGIA SOLONS TO GATHER SOON

taxation would be required to take care of these bond issues, part of the present revenues devoted to the highway department being used to retire the road bonds, and similar arrangements being made for the education bond issue. It is a proposal to use the revenue of the next thirty years at once, in order that the benefit of the better roads, etc., may be enjoyed at once and all through the thirty-year period.

Civil Service Urged.

Representative Lee Langley, of Floyd county, will introduce a number of important bills, one being for the creation of a civil service commission to supervise employment of all workers in state departments and bureaus, and another providing for disfranchisement, for one primary, of all qualified voters who fail to cast their ballots at any statewide primary for statehouse officers without filing legal excuse with the tax collector of their county.

Representative Lawrence Camp, of Campbell county, is eager to see his bill providing for badly needed repair on the capitol building passed. He proposes to provide funds for remodeling of the ground floor of the building, so that it may be used for offices, thus relieving the serious congestion which has forced some departments into rented buildings. Two departments have this summer taken over offices on this floor, the state auditor and the state revenue department, and those offices have proven so convenient and attractive that it is certain the rest of the floor could easily be remodeled to provide quarters for many more. The floor is now used chifly as a storage room and much space is going to waste, it is pointed out.

Repairs Necessary.

The necessity for repairs to the building as a whole is self-evident, hardly a week passing but some strong wind or heavy rain causing plastering or a window in the dome to crash down onto the main rotunda—fortunately, without casualty to any one as yet.

It is probable that the tax reform program will again be agitated at this session and there is also a probability that an investigation will be demanded of the state revenue department. This department was created at the special session last fall and it is understood that the amount of collections it has made to date have proven very unsatisfactory to the members of both houses who sponsored the legislation creating it.

While this is an election year it is not expected that the political fortunes of the various candidates for sttate office will affect the work of the assembly more than is customary. On Saturday, Mrs. Bessie Anderson, secretary of the state democratic executive committee, stated that eight candidates had paid entrance fees and qualified for various races. It is known, however, that a number of others have practically decided to enter the race. Their entrance fees will have to be paid this week, as the date for closing was set by the committee as noon, June 21, next Saturday.

Candidates Qualify.

Those who have qualified by payment of their fees include Secretary of State S. Guyt McLendon, to succeed himself; Pension Commissioner C. E. McGregor, to succeed himself; State Treasurer William J. Speer, to succeed himself; Attorney General George M. Napier, to succeed himself; Comptroller General William A. Wright, to succeed himself; United States senator William J. Harris, to succeed himself; George F. Hunnicutt, for commissioner of agriculture, opposed to J. J. Brown, the incumbent, and Albert J. Woodruff, for the state public service commission, in opposition to Commissioner James D. Price.

No opposition has yet developed against any of the first six candidates named above, with the exception of U. S. Senator William J. Harris. While there have been no definite announcements made for his office, rumor has mentioned several names as possibilities. Chief Justice Richard B Russell, of the state supreme court, has admitted that he will probably enter the race at the last minute if no other candidate appears in the meantime, to make the fight on the same platform Justice Russell favors—one of opposition to the league of nations and world court ideas, and for reform in the federal reserve bank system.

Opposition To Walker.

Dr. L. G. Hardman, of Commerce, has announced that he will probably be a candidate for the governorship in opposition to Governor Clifford Walker, who will seek reelection, but has not yet paid his fee or made formal publication of his candidacy.

Herschel H. Elders, member of the house of representatives from Tattnall county, has announced that he will be a candidate for the governorship, but he, likewise, has not yet paid his entrance fee.

Many members of both houses will be candidates for reelection or for other places.

L. J. Steele, of DeKalb county, is a candidate for congress from the fifth district, and Representative Ben J. Fowler, of Bibb, is running for congress from the sixth.

Dr. Craig R. Arnold, of Lumpkin, is a candidate for the state senate from the thirty-second district, and many other members of the lower house are seeking membership in the senate of the next legislative body.

ITALY IN FUROR OVER KIDNAPING

Rome, June 14.—(By the Associated Press.)—The disappearance of Giacomo Matteotti, known as the "millionaire socialist," member of the chamber of deputies, today brought about the resignation of Undersecretary of State Finzi. He explained he was resigning in order to defend himself "against the libelous accusations spread against him by the opposition in their allusions to him when they speak of the investigators of the Matteotti case."

The police have denied a report printed in the Messagero that the body of Matteotti was found last Thursday in a forest near Vico. A similar report of the finding of the missing deputy's body, published in a Milan newspaper, was also denied.

The Giornale D'Italia announces that a well-known Fascisti named Dumini, who was arrested in connection with the Matteotti disappearance, and another suspect of Putato, who was also taken in custody, have established alibis.

Several sections of the Fascisti national militia have been mobilized. Contingents of carabiniers have been centered in Rome to preserve order.

SENT TO PEN HERE FOR WHISKY FRAUD

Pittsburg, Pa., June 14.—Sentences ranging from six months in jail to two years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta and fines of $10,000 were imposed today by Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker on the A. Guckenheimer and Brothers company and six individuals, convicted of removing 90,000 gallons of bonded whisky from the company's plant on counterfeit permits. In passing sentence Judge Schoonmaker told the defendants they had been found guilty of a "very grave violation" of the prohibition laws.

The company was fined $10,000. Other sentences were:

Louis Farkas, vice president of the company, and Lewis Brown, a director, each fined $10,000 and sentenced to serve two years in the penitentiary.

William J. Ferris, former prohibition agent, two years in penitentiary.

William Dickerman and E. C. Little, truckmen, each fined $2,000 and sentenced to serve one year and one day in the penitentiary.

George Beck, truckman, six months in jail.

Joseph Tito, truckman, will be sentenced later. A physician reported that Tito was ill and unable to appear in court.

WIFE OF SEN. HARRIS MRS. COOLIDGE'S GUEST

Washington, June 14.—(Special.) Mrs. W. J. Harris, wife of the Georgia senator, was the guest of Mrs. Coolidge today at the Flag day exercises, near the Washington monument, where the wife of the president presented awards to winners in the national essay contest conducted by the Women's Overseas League on the subject, "Why a Young Man I Know Should Attend a Citizens' Military Training Camp."

Major General John L. Hines, deputy chief of the staff of the army, presided at the exercises, and Secretary of War John W. Weeks made the principal address.

KLAN OFFICIALS SLATED FOR CAN

Baton Rouge, La., June 14.—Paul D. Pergins, great titan of the Ku Klux Klan in Louisiana; J. Stuart Douglas, speaker of the house of representatives, and other legislators are slated for expulsion from the klan because they supported anti-klan legislation enacted into law by the assembly last week, according to reports prevalent here.

At least five other members of the legislature are in bad with the klan, the story goes, as a result of a visit here of James Murray, representative of klan headquarters in Atlanta, who is said to have recommended expulsion. They are Senators Delos R. Johnson, of Franklinton, and Norris C. Williamson, of Milliken, and Representatives R. L. Prophit and L. M. Spencer, of Tallulah, and William Germany, reputed state klan official. Prophit and Spencer are from north Louisiana, a hotbed of klan activity.

The legislature enacted into law three measures aimed at secrecy and the mask, sponsored by Governor Fuqua, and they were signed immediately by the executive. One compels the filing of the membership list of all secret organizations at stated intervals with the secretary of state. The second prohibits the wearing of masks but excepts the Mardi Gras carnival. The third makes any illegal act a felony if the perpetrator wears a mask.

Memphis Shooting Blocks Traffic For Half Hour

Former Railroad Men Stage Gun Duel Over Locker in Heart of City.

Memphis, Tenn., June 14.—R. J. Kinney, 23, a railroad special agent, was shot and fatally wounded shortly before noon today at the intersection of Main street and Madison avenue, in the center of the downtown retail shopping district, by E. A. McBride, a former railroad employee, but now engaged as an investigator for a private detective agency.

McBride surrendered. He is quoted as having told the police that he fired the shots in self-defense.

At the time of the shooting the street was crowded with shoppers, many of them women and children. Several persons were knocked from their feet as bystanders scurried for shelter. Traffic was blocked for half an hour before the police succeeded in clearing the street of the crowd attracted by the shooting.

The shooting is said to have been an aftermath of a quarrel which originated nearly two years ago in a dispute over the right of a locker at a railroad yard where Kinney and McBride were employed. When they met today the quarrel was renewed.

According to a police report, McBride declared Kinney, after an exchange of words, made a motion to draw a pistol and spectators are said to have told the police that when Kinney fell, mortally wounded, his pistol, unfired, was clutched in his hand.

CHAIRMAN ANNOUNCES G. O. P. EXECUTIVE BODY

Cleveland, June 14.—William M. Butler, chairman of the republican national committee, today announced the personnel of the executive committee of twenty-one members which completes the working organization of the national committee.

The six principal officers of the national committee are ex-officio members of the executive committee. They are: Chairman Butler, Massachusetts; Charles D. Hilles, vice chairman, New York; Ralph E. ALIENISTS EXAMINE SLAYERS OF FRANKS

Chicago, June 14.—Every possible mental disorder which might be urged in their defense is to be sought by probably fifty alienists examining Nathan E. Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb, millionaires' sons and confessed kidnapers-slayers of schoolboy Robert Franks, attorneys for the defense indicated last night after Dr. Karl M. Bowman, of the Boston Psycopathic hospital, and Dr. H. S. Hulbert, of Oak Park, Ills., had visited the youths in jail. The examinations will be the basis of the defense at the trial, set for August 4, Attorney Benjamin Bachrach, associated with Attorney Clarence Darrow, said.

The alienists yesterday spent two hours with each youth. The same process is to be repeated today. The result, Dr. Bowman said, would be reported to defense counsel Monday.

Meanwhile State's Attorney Crowe has directed Milton D. Smith, assistant prosecutor, to make an intensive study of forms of insanity as preparation for cross-examination of the alienists testifying for the youths.

Due to Woman, Mexicans Expel British Envoy

Mexico City, June 14.—A woman in the case led to the request of the Mexican government for the expulsion of British Charge d'Affaires Cummings, it was learned here Saturday.

Cummings aroused the ire of the government when he undertook to handle the case of a Mrs. Evans. Mrs. Evans, it is reported, was trying to obtain a large sum of money from the Mexican government for lands taken away from her, and for months she had villified the government in general and the minister of the interior in particular.

An investigation is under way to determine the extent of Cummings' connection with Mrs. Evans.

Washington, June 14.—Unofficial observers here are inclined to attach considerable importance to the reported request of the Mexican government for the recall of British Charge d'Affaires Cummings, as the affair seems to mark the culmination of a series of difficulties between British interests and the Mexican government.

Neither the British embassy nor the state department here have received any official advices regarding the report.

ISHII NOT SELECTED AS AMBASSADOR YET

Tokio, June 14.—(By the Associated Press.)—It is officially denied this Viscout Kijuhiro Ishii has been selected to become Japan's new ambassador at Washington, though it is stated authoritatively that he is the most likely candidate for the post.

Baron Keishiro Matsui, foreign minister in the Kiyoura cabinet which has just left office, also is mentioned as a possible selection for the Washington embassy.

However, there were strong intimations in official quarters today that no definite choice would be made of a successor to the present ambassador, Masanao Hanihara, until Mr. Hanihara has returned to Japan and can be consulted.

The expectation is that Mr. Hanihara will leave Washington early in July, simultaneously with Secretary of State Hughes' departure on a visit it is understood he plans to make to England.

ALLEGED SLAYERS OF PROHI OFFICER RELEASED ON BOND

Columbus, Ga. June 14.—Najoleon, Enoch and Alfred Garrett, under indictment in Taylor county charged with the murder of Federal Prohibition Officer R. W. Jackson, have been released from jail under a $5,000 bond each, according to advices from Butler, Ga.

The Garrett brothers were jointly indicted for murder as the result of Jackson's death in a pitched gun battle December 16, 1920, when federal officers raided a still near the Garrett home. They recently finished a two-year term each in the Atlanta federal penitentiary for conspiracy to obstruct a United States officer. It had been planned to have a special term of the Taylor supreme court to try the Garretts, but it is not expected that they will be arraigned until the October term, due to the fact they have made bond.

DENY NEW TRIAL TO MRS. HUGHES

Probability that Mrs. Ida Hughes, under sentence of death for the murder of her mother-in-law, Mrs. M. C. Hughes, will pay on the scaffold became stronger Saturday when Judge G. H. Howard overruled her motion for ne wtrial.

Mrs. Hughes shot to death her mother-in-law in her home in Eagan Park in 1923, while the elder woman was going through the defendant's trunk searching for letters, the state's evidence said. The defendant contended the mother-in-law was searching the place without authority of law, and that the shooting resulted from a scuffle.

Attorney H. A. Allen, chief counsel for Mrs. Hughes, declared Saturday he would appeal Judge Howard's decision to the supreme court of Georgia. Should Mrs. Hughes be denied a new trial by that court, application will be made for commutation of the sentence to life imprisonment. This procedure would be first before the prison commission, which would recommend for or against commutation to the governor. Regardless of the commission's recommendation, application will be made to the governor directly, it was said.

Executive clemency, or a new trial on an extraordinary motion, are the only avenues of escape from the gallows now open to Mrs. Hughes, unless she should win in another appeal now pending. She is now in Fulton tower. Her counsel have expressed belief that her case is not one in which the capital penalty will be eventually exacted.

Appeal from a decision of the superior court refusing to set aside the verdict of guilty on the ground that Mrs. Hughes was not in the court room when it was returned is now pending in the supreme court as a separate case.

He Kills Himself So Wife May Wed Boarder in Home

Detroit, Mich., June 14.—Joseph Novicki, 36 years old, is dead of poison, self-administered yesterday, he said, before he died, so his wife might collect his insurance and marry a boarder at their home. Mrs. Takla Novicki, the wife, 28, admitted, according to authorities that she was in love with Tony Lausicki, the boarder, and intimated she intends to marry him.

Culmination of the domestic crisis came yesterday when Novicki came home and found his wife weeping. She told him, police quoted her as saying, that she was in love with Lausicki, but he would not permit her to leave her husband because he was out of work.

Novicki went into another room and returned in a few minutes, announcing to his wife he had taken poison.

"The $1,000 insurance will enable you to be married," he is reported to have said just before he died.

W. A. SUTTON SPEAKER AT PRESS CONVENTION

Royston, Ga., June 14.—Making a plea that the press of the state exert all the influence it can muster to "educate the people of Georgia" to the fact that "a new day will dawn for the state" when Georgians realize just what untold wealth and possibilities are theirs, Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools of Atlanta, speaking before the Eighth and Ninth District Press association here today, presented to that gathering, "A New Creed for Georgia," which, he declared, if put into practice, would make the state what it should be, and elevate it to the position that rightfully belongs to it.

The first article of that creed, Mr. Sutton named, is "I believe in what lies under the soil of Georgia. I will do my best to find and develop it."

The speaker, in discussing this part of the "creed," declared that untold wealth lies under the soil of Georgia, and the reason that this wealth is undeveloped and the reason that it remains undeveloped is due to two mighty forces, "failure on the part of the educational forces of Georgia to teach their development, and failure on the part of the press of Georgia to give to the world the knowledge of the untold wealth which lies beneath our soil.

"Our purpose as school men and your purpose as men of the press," the speaker told the gathering, "is to declare to the state that there lies beneath our soil in our minerals, in our clays and in our granite, our marble, our slate enough wealth to make the state of Georgia fabulously rich. But the great need of the hour is trained heads and trained hands to bring this wealth to the surface and make it a reality.

"The second article of my creed for Georgia," Mr. Sutton continued, "is this: 'I believe in that which grows out of the soil of Georgia. I will seek to develop it and to market it.' Men will never rise if their accomplishments are above what they believe can be accomplished. The great trouble with the citizenry of Georgia is that it has not allowed itself to believe in the possibilities of the soil.

"A great trouble with our people is that we are not willing to pay the price of education. Ignorant hands have made our cotton in years gone by, but ignorant hands cannot make our cotton now. We must have a citizenship trained in agriculture. The trouble has been, we have not given the right type of education, or the boll weevil would not be devastating Georgia. If there had been a scientific laboratory in every high school in the state during the last 25 years, we would have boys and girls trained to combat every pest that now assails the great crops of the state of Georgia."

Mr. Sutton declared that cooperative marketing of the products of the soil should be developed more than it has been, adding that "until we teach every child, regardless of where he lives, the great principle concerning the things that grow out of the soil, the development of these problems, the manufacture and marketing of these problems, we can never become a great state.

"The third article in this new creed for Georgia would be: 'I believe in the forces that play on and above the earth!'"

The state's water power, the wind above the earth, the forces of electricity, the power of steam—none of these, the speaker declared, are fully developed, and until they are, the progress of Georgia will be impaired that far.

"If we accept these three principles as a new creed for our state," Mr. Sutton said in conclusion," and put it into practice through our press and through our school rooms, there will be a new day dawning for the great state of Georgia."

While Lawyer Weeps Judge Says Client Ought to Be Hanged

Chicago, June 14.—Russell Scott, former Toronto promoter, who turned holdup man and shot and killed a drug clerk last April, heard Superior Judge Lindsay declare his opinion today that he ought to be hanged.

Scott recently pleaded guilty to murder, apparently expecting a prison sentence.

When Judge Lindsay declared that "there is a class of cases that demand the extreme penalty and this is of that class," Scott's attorney broke into weeping and implored the court to allow Scott to withdraw his plea of guilty. But the court said, "there are no mitigating circumstances here."

The judge continued the case until Wednesday without passing sentence.

GOOD WILL SPECIAL STARTS TOUR TONIGHT

Savannah Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—At one minute after 12 o'clock Sunday night—on the break of the minute of June 16—the Savannah "Good-Willers" leave on a special Pullman train of six coaches for a tour of the chief cities of the state, the trip to last one week. More than 125 leading business men, representing nearly that number of interests and organizations, compose the party which is under the auspices of the board of trade, with Gordon Saussy and Gordon Groover chief chairmen of committees. The marine band from Parris Island accompanies the tourists on the swing around the state.

The purpose is for Savannah business men to get acquainted, face to face, with Georgia towns and people, and for the Georgia people to know Savannahans, the trip being undertaken in hope that there may be aroused sentiment in favor of the state port proposition for Georgia producers and consumers.

Augusta, Thomson, Madison and Athens will be the first day's stops. After a night spent in Athens attending the opening of commencement week of the University of Georgia, the party goes to Gainesville and then to Atlanta to spend Tuesday. Wednesday has eight towns on the tour, Rome, where the Georgia Association of County Commisioners will be in session and will be met; Newnan, Cedartown, Carrollton, Griffin, Barnesville, Forsyth and Macon are the stops.

Thursday, Columbus, Americus, Albany, Cordele and Fitzgerald will be the places for meeting the people. Friday visits will be paid to Moultrie Thomasville, Bainbridge, Cairo, Quitman and Valdosta. The last day of the trip will be to Waycross, Brunswick and Jesup.

The tour was announced to mayors and commercial bodies of the state, and no entertainment was asked or expected. However, hospitable Georgia cities and towns have disregarded that suggestion, and at many points citizens, through various organizations, have prepared to welcome the boosters for Georgia and her interests, luncheons, banquets, barbecues and automobile trips about many towns having been announced already.

The trip will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000 and is one of the really big things attempted by the board of trade.

COOLIDGE ORDERS SALARY INCREASE

Washington, June 14.—President Coolidge today ordered the revision in salaries for 480,000 government employees in field service to go into effect on July 1 despite failure of the bill carrying funds for the purpose to become law.

The president's action will permit the increase authorized.

President Coolidge issued the order after a conference with Chairman Madden, of the house appropriations committee, and Director Lord, of the budget. Mr. Lord pointed out that since it clearly was the intent of congress that the salaries shold be revised, as called for in the classification act of 1923, any extra appropriation necessary would be approved immediately upon the convening of congress in December.

Under the order department heads were instructed to apportion their appropriation so as to cover the adjustment of the compensation of the civilian employees in the field service to correspond to the rates established for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia.

Field service employees whose salaries are specifically fixed by law will not receive the increase, but Director Lord said these cases are only 1 per cent of the total number.

The action solved another of the fiscal problems facing the administration as the result of the failure of two important appropriation bills. Administration of the bonus law was ordered yesterday by President Coolidge, who directed the veterans' bureau to set aside funds for this work until additional appropriations could be made in December.

Director Hines, of the veterans' bureau, today informed the president, "we are going full speed ahead with the bonus."

The measure was lost in the closing minutes of congress and but for the president's action today the employees would have received a cut of $20 a month in salary instead of the proposed increase.

RED DEER CANYON IN CANADA RIVALS U.S. WORLD WONDER

Calgary, Alberta, June 14.—To the haunts of the giant dinosaurs of millions of years ago will lead a new trail in the course of a few weeks. The Bad Lands of Alberta, situated north of Brooks, in the Red Deer river valley, have become very attractive to tourists in recent years, and James W. Davidson, president of the Calgary Good Roads association, has investigated the means of reaching this prehistoric research field and soon will have maps that will indicate the easiest route from Calgary. These Bad Lands are very little known but they are among the most wonderful scenic spots in Canada. American and Canadian scientists have long been familiar with the wealth of fossilized remains of the monsters of untold ages ago, but to the average persons they are unknown. With a well-marked trail from Calgary they will prove an unusual magnet to visitors to western Canada.

The Red Deer flows through an amazing canyon that is said to be almost a replica of the famous Colorado canyon with the most striking coloring of the banks. Here, too, is found wild cactus with the most delicate flowers and other things strange to Canada.

Make Plans for Fair.

Sparta, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—The Hancock County Fair association has contracted with the Broadway Amusement company, of New York city, for their midway attractions at the fair this fall. This is said to be one of the largest and best carnival organizations which will be on the road.

Enrich Your Blood With This Newer Form of Iron

For many years physicians and chemists experimented to produce a newer form of iron, like the iron in your blood, because they realized that the old metallic irons often blackened the teeth and upset the stomach. Their examinations proved that three people out of every four were deficient in iron content in the blood and that thousands were weak, sick, nervous, ailing and run-down, and suffering from all sorts of alarming symptoms, when as a matter of fact their trouble was all due to iron starvation of the blood. At last they discovered this newer form of iron, like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples in highly concentrated form. It quickly helps put strength into your muscles and color into your cheeks. Get your doctor to take your red blood count today, then take this newer form of Iron known as Nuxated Iron for a few weeks and watch your red blood corpuscles increase; see how much purer and richer your blood becomes; how much stronger and better you feel; what difference it makes in your nerves. Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. Your money will be refunded if you do not obtain satisfactory results. In tablet form only. At all druggists.—(adv.)

Gordon's Platform Based On Tax Raise Opposition

Alderman Robert Gordon who says Atlanta needs a business man's administration.

Alderman R. A. Gordon issued his formal announcement as a candidate for mayor Saturday afternoon, basing his bid for the office strictly on the need for a practical business man as head of the city administration.

"I do not believe that this is the proper time to go into detail as to what I intend to do should I be elected," Alderman Gordon said, "but I do believe the city is suffering under a penny wise and pound foolish system of doing business and needs some protection against continued increases in water rates, taxes and tax assessments."

Alderman Gordon's announcement follows:

"To the people of Atlanta:

"I take this means of formally announcing myself a candidate for election as mayor of Atlanta subject to the democratic white primary September 24, 1924.

"I decided to enter the campaign at the urgent request of a large number of people who believe that I can as mayor guide the city's affairs so as to avoid a recurrence during the next two years of the annual financial emergency of the last two years.

"By applying to the city's business the sound principles I have learned by experience in my own rapidly growing private business, I believe I can enable all departments of the city government to live within the normal income and without need for such emergency measures as water rate increase, tax rate increase and tax assessment increase which apparently have become necessary for this year."

"ROBERT A. GORDON."

MONEY APPROPRIATED TO PURCHASE NEGROES

Delving into historical records in the office of the secretary of state, interesting facts on Georgia's first state highway department were discovered Saturday. Secretary of State S. Guyt McLendon produced copies of an act of the legislature, passed in 1829—almost a century ago—providing for the improvement of the roads and rivers of the state.

However, the plan evidently did not prove satisfactory, for in 1833 the legislature passed another act, the effect of which was to undo the work of the earlier enactment. From that date until 1919, when the law creating the present state highway department was passed, roads were left entirely in the hands of counties, for building and for maintenance, and the state government had nothing to do with them.

The act of 1829, as recorded in Secretary McLendon's office, authorized the governor to appoint two "fit and proper persons" to superintend the improvement of the public roads and rivers of this state, and these persons constituted the first Georgia highway commission.

Would Buy Negroes.

Section 2 of the act appropriated $50,000 "for the purchase of such a number of able-bodied negroes within the state of Georgia, and who have been in Georgia twelve months, as will, in addition to the number now owned by the state, amount to the number of one hundred and ninety."

These slaves were purchased and were distributed as follows: Columbus 25, Macon 25, Milledgeville 15, Augusta 75, Savannah 25, Flint River region at Perry 25. The highway commission was to employ these public hands, as they were called, in the construction of highways, but the legislative direction as to what roads should be constructed was indefinite.

Manifestly, the plan was to connect the points named with each other by a system of good roads, as that subject was understood at that time. A first-class road was to be 30 feet wide, a second-class road 20 feet wide, and a causeway 16 feet wide. This effort at highway construction by, and in behalf, of the state, as distinguished from the counties, did not satisfy, for in 1833 the legislature passed a bill entitled, "An Act to sell and dispose of all the public hands, together with all the horses, mules, carts, tools and implements belonging to the state of Georgia, now in possession of the different superintendents." Under this act, all of the public property described was to be advertised and sold at public auction at Gainesville, Decatur, Madison, Elberton, Milledgeville, LaGrange, Macon, Perry and Savannah. This act was approved December 23, 1833.

Brought Big Price.

On December 13, 1834, the committee on finance, to which had been referred the correspondence and documents in relation to the disposal of the public hands, reported that the negroes, mules, horses, wagons, carts, tools and implements sold by William C. Lyman, superintendent of the eastern division, in pursuance of an act of the last legislature, sold for $63,936. The committee further reported that the property disposed of by N. B. Powell, superintendent of the western division, sold for $44,199.87, and that the property attached to the railroad station, sold by Thomas King, amounted to $9,328.50, making a total of $117,464.37.

The act of 1833, in section 8, provided that the moneys that may be realized from the sale of said wagons, stocks, etc., shall be placed as aforesaid in the Central Bank of Georgia, "and by that institution to be used as other funds of said bank, and to become a permanent fund for internal improvement, the interest of which only shall be applied or disbursed for said object in said manner as the legislature shall from time to time direct."

Thus ended Georgia's first attempt to establish a system of highways constructed and maintained by the state. From 1823 until 1919 the entire subject of highways was under the jurisdiction of the county authorities, first, under the justices of the inferior court, then ordinaries or county commissioners, called commissioners of roads and revenues.

$15,000 Appropriated.

In addition to the appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of slaves, under the act of 1833, an additional sum of $15,000 was appropriated for the purchase of tools and necessary outfit for road construction. The governor was required to employ such a number of fit and competent agents as to him might seem necessary, whose duty it was to purchase for the use of the state, these public hands, and these purchasing agents were to be allowed such compensation as the governor might think just and reasonable.

The act required that these purchasing agents should take a bill of sale for the negro, or negroes, so purchased, and to cause the same to be duly executed, authenticated and proved, according to law, and transmit the same to the governor, to be filed and recorded in the office of the secretary of state.

Syracuse Announces School of Citizens And Public Affairs

Syracuse, N. Y., June 14.—Chancellor Charles Wesley Flint, of Syracuse university, today announced establishment of a school of citizenship and public affairs as an integral part of the college of liberal arts at Syracuse university. Endowment as well as current support of the school is provided by the gift of a benefactor whose identity, by his own wishes, is not disclosed at this time.

The school will enlarge greatly the curriculum of the university in political science and allied subjects, it was said, and will add several professors who are authority in the fields covered by the foundation to the Syracuse faculty.

"In addition to the main gift," Dr. Flint said, "the Carnegie corporation has made an appropriation toward expense of organizing the work.

"The new school will not be the organ of any particular economic sect."

TWO ARE SOUGHT IN THEFT OF 1,500 BARRELS OF BEER

Chicago, June 14.—Fifteen hundred barrels of beer were recently smuggled out of the Standard Brewery here while the brewery was being guarded by United States deputy marshals and, as a result, Terry Druggan and Frank Lake, alleged beer runners, are being sought to face a possible three-year term in prison.

The brewery was under federal injunction at the time of the coup. Violation of such an injunction, according to legal precedent, puts the violators in contempt of court for which offense they can be sent to prison without a jury trial.

The two alleged beer runners are said to have bribed a train crew to shunt a string of cars on the siding alongside the brewery. The cars were loaded with beer at night and moved to a point about three miles away, and there the barrels of beer were transferred to a fleet of trucks and hauled away.

FOUR UNDER ARREST FOR JEWEL HOLDUP

New York, June 14.—Three men, two of whom the police say are out on bail in connecton with charges concerning other holdups, were arrested early today in connection with the robbery of a pouch containing $100,000 worth of jewelry from a truck last Tuesday.

The police also recovered two stolen automobiles, which are believed to have been used by the 10 men who participated in the holdup. The robbery occurred in the daytime on a busy street intersection just after a taxicab driver, believed by the police to have been in league with the bandits, had begun an altercation with the traffic officer on duty.

The prisoners are Edward Diamond, 21, alleged to be out on $20,000 bail in connection with the robbery of a silk truck; John Monforte, 24, said to be out on $25,000 bail pending hearing on a holdup charge, and John Diamond, 28.

The police also have questioned a fourth man on whom were found a $1,000 watch and several jewels.

The mail pouch contained 29 packages of unset diamonds, other precious stones and watches, consigned to jewelers.

A fourth man, who described himself as Edward Doyle, of Manhattan later was arrested as a suspect. The police said they found on him a platinum, gold-studded watch, which they believed to be part of the loot taken from the mail pouch.

Herriot Cabinet Nearly All New Figures

French Ministries Number Fourteen in New Government, as Against Thirteen in Old.

CLEMENTEL DRAWS DIFFICULT TASK

Foreign Policy To Be on Gloved-Hand Basis With First Handclasp Offered to Great Britain.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Paris, June 14.—Edouard Herriot, leader of the coalition of the left, which won the recent election, has, after a governmental crisis of fourteen days, in many respects unprecedented in French history, finally formed a new government. His ministry, made up to carry out the repeatedly expressed determination to exclude the minority from participation in public afairs, comprise representatives of his own radical party and groups asociated with it in the successful electoral campaign.

The only non-partisan member is General Maurice Nollet, minister of war, whose selection is rather puzzling to political critics, who remark that, while the policy of the new cabinet is supposed to be one of conciliation toward Germany, the war department will be in the hands of a man whom the Germans have defied as head of the inter-allied military control commission, and who knows more about the state of Germany's military establishment than any other and whose opinions on this subject tend little towards the mutual confidence necessary for real conciliation.

Gesture at Germany.

Friends of M. Herriot say that General Nollet was chosen for the purpose of making the Germans understand that while the new government was ready to come to a friendly agreement it intends to see that in the new arrangement, France will watch over her security.

M. Clementel, minister of finance, and Rene Renoult, minister of justice, are the only members of the cabinet with governmental experience. The former has been minister of commerce and minister of agriculture; the latter minister of the interior and minister of labor.

The others of the ministry are "young blood," including Herriot himself, whose experience in the country's

BYSTANDER AGAIN ONLY ONE INJURED AS BULLETS RAIN

While walking down Decatur street near Pratt Saturday night, Harold Moon, 18, of Grayson, was severely wounded in the left arm by Bobbie Smith, a negro. Smith, police state, was shooting at another negro when young Moon and his brother, W. W. Moon, of 306 East Hunter street, walked within range of the shots.

City Detectives E. J. Hunt and E. C. Hudson, who were passing in an automobile, stopped their machine and began firing at the negro, who threw up his hands and surrendered. He is being held at police headquarters on charges of disorderly conduct, and shooting at another. The other negro, at whom Smith was firing, escaped.

LIBERAL HARMONY URGED IN SPEECH

Lloyd George Flays Opponents in Sounding New Keynote Symphony for His Party.

Llandrindod, Wales, June 14.—New keynotes for the policy of the British liberal party were sounded by Lloyd George in an address Saturday to 400 delegates to the conference of Welsh liberals.

The present political situation is the most confused in history, Lloyd George asserted. He ridiculed Stanley Badwin, the conservative leader, for "talking socialism," declared Premier MacDonald was "playing the role of a timid conservative," and urged a closer reunion of both wings of the liberal party.

The former premier stressed the necessity of modernizing the land laws, which he characterized as "rusty chains of feudalism, weighing down life in the villages."

He criticized the rapacity of mine owners, who, he said, held "the meanest of all monopolies."

"No wonder the miners voted for the most violent remedies," he continued. "I am afraid the miners cannot depend upon the socialists to assist in the riddance of these monopolies. The socialists are too intent on creating trusts of their own, which will be equally dangerous, notwithstanding that a large number of people are interested in them."

The liberal leader declared labor's plans to solve both the mining and housing problems were equivalent to creating monopolies.

"They fight monopolies by means of creating monopolies," he said.

"Britain cannot look to the tories for freedom, therefore liberalism alone is capable of extricating the country from the thicket of monopolies."

COOLIDGE'S VIEWS ON SAVING MONEY REVEAL CHARACTER

Economy, Thrift in Private Life, as Well as in Government, Is Part of President's Philosophy.

HAS HAD VERY LITTLE MONEY ALL HIS LIFE

Never Made More Than $3,000 Per Year Except in Last Three Political Offices.

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, June 14.—There will be a renewed flood now of information about Coolidge—articles about his public career and his private personality, his tastes, his ideals, his points of views, his background in Massachusetts and Vermont. The intention of the present article, however, is merely to cover one angle of Coolidge which seems to the writer interesting and important—which seems, indeed, to go as far as any single phase of a man's personality can toward explaining the predominating characteristic of his attitude as president toward government and the affairs of the country. This aspect of Coolidge is important as respects his public function; and also, as the writer believes, is interesting to any person who ever reflects about that indefinite but fundamental thing that we call a man's philosophy of life.

Money Standards Change.

We are in a time of changing standards about money.

The one aspect of the nature of our income tax and inheritance laws, both federal and state, and of the prevailing attitude of the government toward both public and private money—the one aspect of all that about which there may be a justified feeling of dubiousness on the part of thoughtful persons—is that thrift, saving, economy, is not prized. On the contrary, economy in government is on the defensive. Those who fight for it do not generally succeed.

Not only that: economy in private life, thrift and saving as a fundamental part of the individual philosophy of life, is not in high standing. The proof of that is equally abundant.

To an older generation of Americans this would have seemed all wrong. A man who was without enough money to buy a Ford automobile, even a second hand one, and whose income is so small that he can save only $5 a week, would have been encouraged under an older American point of view to put such narrow savings as this into the savings bank and ultimately into a home.

Coolidge's View Older.

Now the point of view of Coolidge toward all this is distinctly that of the older American generation. He is for economy in government. That more than any other one thing is the outstanding feature of his record. And his public attitude about economy in

Wary Delegate Fears Gotham Pitfalls

:: O'NEILL DOES NOT WANT TO BLUNDER INTO DAMP DENS ::

And Asks Location of Wet Iniquities

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

New York, June 14.—The innocent democratic delegate from the tall grass country west of Tenth avenue is very grateful to the New York Anti-Saloon league for its warning against the iniquities of New York. In fact, now that his interest has been aroused, he would like to know more about them. Especially, he would like to know the exact address of one pitfall, a saloon, mentioned by the league in its circular letter to the democrats. If it is available, will the league be good enough to furnish the password to this den of iniquity, the list of prices and the hours of business, and oblige Charles O'Neill, of Altoona, Pa., who is one of the innocent democratic delegates?

The innocent Mr. O'Neill received the warning recently and has sent a copy of his reply to the New York state committee for the nomination of Al Smith, of which Franklin D. Roosevelt, former assistant secretary of the navy, is chairman.

It is easy to read between the lines of Mr. O'Neill's letter that he is afraid. Some might conclude that he is afraid of wandering into the iniquitous saloon mentioned by the Anti-Saloon league. Others might draw the conclusion that Mr. O'Neill's greatest fear is that he will never find it.

"Your timely letter warning me against the iniquities and tricks of bad New York has been received," he writes. "The dark and obvious schemes which they will try to impose upon the ignorance of the delegates to the democratic convention from the great hinterland is appalling. It is reassuring to know that we will be under the protecting influence of your able and experienced organization. You make clear the dangers that will beset our faltering footsteps because of the intrigues of the 'wet Smith-Tammany-Underwood-Wall street' crowd. Those of us who are inexperienced in the wicked ways of New York must be protected.

"Our resources must be cared for. In all confidence I submit my spiritual, not financial, welfare to the tender solicitude of the Anti-Saloon league of New York.

"The information concerning the establishment of a bar-room on Twenty-fourth street is quite illuminating. However, you forgot to give the number of the house and the name of the head bartender."

There is just a trace of something in Mr. O'Neill's letter which suggests the belief that he isn't altogether sincere with the New York Anti-Saloon league. He has the extreme bad taste to speak of the fact that William H. Anderson is not "enjoying his vacation" in Sing Sing prison. And he goes into the extremely distressing matter of John D. Rockefeller's withdrawal of financial support from the league, one of the incidents which preceded Mr. Anderson's invitation to spend a year at the castle on the Hudson.

"Our state chairman wrote me for a contribution," Mr. O'Neill says, stating that he wanted to hire a band and buy badges for the Pennsylvania visitors. If, as you say, the "Wet-Smith - Tammany - Underwood-Wall street" crowd have hired all the bands I cannot understand why I was asked for a contribution. Could you get William H. Anderson, an expert in financial matters, to investigate this? It looks to me as if something is rotten in New York. Of course, I know brass bands and crowd songs usually are rotten.

"Does John D. Rockefeller live on Wall street? I would like to see his house. It must be a big one. Does he still contribute to the Anti-Saloon league or has Smith induced him to contribute to his campaign?

"Mr. Anderson will surely be missed at the convention. Those of us who come from the great unwashed belt will need his kindly activities in our behalf to take care of our money.

"By the way," Mr. O'Neill concludes, and here there is a strong suspicion of insincerity, "don't forget to give me all the information you can about the bar-room and the head bartender, who must be a very bad man."

SEVEN ARE HURT IN AUTO CRASHES

Hugh Farmer, 10-Year-Old Boy, May Die—72 Cases Are Made by Police.

Seven persons were injured in automobile accidents Saturday, one of these probably fatally.

Officers docketed 72 new cases during the day against violators of the city traffic laws. Of these, 18 were for violating the dimmer ordinance, 16 for speeding, 11 for reckless driving, three for operating a machine while under the influence of whisky, and 24 on a blanket charge of violating the traffic ordinance.

Boy Badly Hurt by Auto.

Hugh Farmer, 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Farmer, of 152 Meade road, Decatur, is at Grady hospital with a fractured skull and other injuries which may prove fatal, as a result of being struck by an automobile driven by J. E. Hall, of Chamblee. The accident occurred at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning in front of 721 Highland avenue.

The little boy was helping G. H. Smith, of McDooough, to sell produce and ran into the street from behind the truck just as Hall was passing in his car, according to officers.

Hall and Smith rushed the injured boy to the hospital and hurried back to Decatur for his mother. No case has been made against Hall. Smith, who saw the accident, described it as unavoidable.

Two Are Bruised.

R. D. Richards, 30, of 101 Hurt street, and W. E. Bramlett, 60, of 102 Capitol avenue, were cut and bruised in a collision of their automobiles Saturday night at Fraser and Richardson streets. The accident was investigated by Officers J. W. Woolley and J. C. Mosley, no cases, however, being made.

W. J. Brown, of 7 Buena Vista avenue, was treated at Grady hospital for severe bruises and cuts which he received when the machine which he was driving collided with a street car in Carnegie way near Cain street. After being released from the hospital, he was taken to police station, where a charge of operating an automobile while under the influence of whisky was docketed against him.

The street car with which he is said to have collided head-on was operated on the Orme street line, and was in charge of Motorman S. C. Tucker and Conductor M. D. Hill.

Man and Son Hurt.

In another mishap Saturday, B. L. Cook, of 39 West Georgia avenue; Henry Head, of 120 DeKalb avenue, and his young son, Dan, were badly shaken up and bruised when a truck driven by Cook smashed into a touring car operated by Head in Grant park Saturday afternoon.

The accident was investigated by Call Officers George B. Lee and M. D. Cartwright. No cases were made at the request of both parties.

Fines were imposed in 46 cases involving various violations of traffic laws in recorder's court Saturday. Of this number, 24 cases were for violation of the dimmer ordinance, 20

HOLLAND IS NAMED COUNTY TREASURER

Will Hold Office Until January 1—Chief Mathieson Urged To Enter November Election.

C. M. Holland, purchasing agent and paymaster for Fulton county, Saturday became temporary county treasurer by appointment of the Fulton county commissioners, succeeding H. L. Culberson, who died Thursday. The regular successor to former Treasurer Culberson will be elected in the November election to take office January 1.

Friends of George Mathieson, chief of the Fulton county police, have planned to put him in this race, it became known Saturday. Chief Mathieson was not consulted, but a group of his friends decided to offer him and pay all expenses of his race. Chief Mathieson refused to comment on this plan until he confers with friends.

Upon ruling of County Attorney Charles Shelton that no legal special election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Culberson can be held, selection by the county commissioners of a pro tempore treasurer until the candidate elected in November takes office was decided upon. Under the law a special election would have to be held six months prior to the next regular election, which would be impossible now.

Mr. Holland, who has been purchasing agent and paymaster 10 years, served as treasurer during Mr. Culberson's illness. He stated Saturday he would not be a candidate for the four-year term, but would resume his former position January 1.

Daughter Killed Speeding To See Mother's Funeral

Death of Mrs. Edna Hendry Is Third in Her Family in One Week.

Tampa, Fla., June 14.—Hastening here to attend the funeral of her mother, of whose death she had learned through a newspaper story less than an hour before, Mrs. Edna Hendry, wife of Henry A. Hendry, prominent and wealthy citizen of Fort Myers, was almost instantly killed Saturday afternoon when she was pinned beneath an automobile a mile from the city limits. Mr. Hendry, who was driving the car, and their two small children escaped with slight injuries.

The death of Mrs. Hendry is the third in her immediate family within one week. She arrived here a week ago to attend the funeral of a brother-in-law. Her mother, Mrs. Susan R. Kratz, died suddenly here Friday afternoon.

The Hendry family had been on an automobile tour of the west coast of Florida for several days and were in a restaurant at Tarpon Springs when Mrs. Hendry learned through a newspaper story of her mother's death. Efforts had been made by relatives to locate her but had been unavailing.

The funeral of the mother scheduled for this afternoon, has been postponed until Monday, when rites will be held for both mother and daughter.

PLANS FOR WILSON MEMORIAL COLLEGE ARE MADE PUBLIC

Noted Americans, Friends of Great War President, Take Leading Part in Big Undertaking.

VALDOSTA TO BE SEAT OF MEMORIAL SCHOOL

Georgia's Share of Huge Building Fund To Be Secured by American Legion Organization.

A two and a half million dollar college, plans for which have been worked out by the highest educational authorities in the world, destined to rank with the finest institutions of learning in the world, and which will be first of all a living memorial to America's great war president, Woodrow Wilson, and charged with the responsibility of keeping as a living force in the world his ideals of justice in government, is now assured for Georgia, according to a statement made Saturday in Atlanta by officials of the Woodrow Wilson Memorial college, to be located at Valdosta, Ga.

Sponsors of the plan have been quietly at work for the past three months securing the cooperation of those who can make successful the ideal institution first planned in the south Georgia city. These plans have now advanced far enough that the details of the new institution may be made public.

First of all, according to the authorities of the new college, it was sought to make the college an authentic memorial to Mr. Wilson, in thorough keeping with his ideals, and of which he would approve. To this end the plan originally adopted was laid before the circle of his closest friends and advisers in Washington and New York, and their approval sought. Not only was this given, but falling into the spirit of the movement these friends undertook to work out the educational plans in detail, to assure that the institution would be educationally correct.

Friends Accept Plans.

To Dr. David T. Houston, formerly a member of Mr. Wilson's cabinet, and Dr. Sidney C. Mezes, president of the College of the City of New York, was entrusted the task of outlining the kind of college a memorial to Mr. Wilson should be. When they had completed the task their plans were approved by the New York circle of President Wilson's friends, and were formally accepted by the Georgia sponsors of the movement.

The new institution will be thoroughly distinctive both as to its facul-

FULL KNOWLEDGE OF BLAST'S CAUSE SEEMS IMPOSSIBLE

Testimony Meager and Conflicting, But Lead on Insufficient Air Pressure Most Promising.

NECESSARY TO CLOSE BREECH BY SHOULDER

One Officer Has Theory Explosion Caused by Error of Gun Crew in Haste of Competition.

San Pedro, Cal., June 14.—The cause of the explosion on the U. S. S. Mississippi, which sent 48 officers and men to their death, may remain forever a mystery.

The naval board of inquiry investigating the disaster studied a maze of conflicting and meagre testimony Saturday, but admitted at the close of their day's session that they had met with no definite success in solving the secret of the blast.

Survivors of the skeleton crew which manned the ill-fated turret No. 2, the prize group of guns on one of the navy's finest vessels, took the witness stand and told what they recalled of incidents in the thick steel box atop the Mississippi deck immediately preceding and after the blast.

The board saw a possible partial explanation of the blast in the statement of Casimir F. Mageswki, a plugman on the gun at which the explosion occurred. His duty was to turn on the air pressure that closed the breech, after the gun was loaded.

Air Low All Morning.

Mageswki testified that he had noticed the air was low all morning, the register barely topping 90 pounds, whereas it normally reached 150 pounds. In fact, so low did the pressure become that he was forced to aid in closing the breech by pushing, the sailor said. Asked if he had reported the condition, Mageswki said he did not, as it would have been necessary to stop firing to remedy the difficulty.

Mageswki explained that he did not want anything to interfere with the crew's chances for a new record.

Lack of thorough cleaning of gun barrels of all gas and fumes after each discharge would tend to heighten ignition, it was pointed out.

The witness said that the day before, a piece of burning silk from one of the bags containing the powder shoved in behind the shells had fallen from the gun bore to the powder pit. Quick action prevented disaster.

Differ on Hearing Order.

Judge Advocate Boyd asked the witness if, after the explosion, he had heard any officer inside the turret give an order to open the hatchways. Mageski said he heard no such order, but James Smith, a gun-trainer, who followed him to the witness stand, testified that he had heard some or-

BANDS BLARE ON AVENUE—GUNMEN WORK OUTSIDE

As Police of 2 Cities Parade

New York, June 14.—Although Philadelphia sent an extra police chief and 500 extra policemen to New York Saturday, two groups of bandits rounded out the week's record of profitable crime in the metropolis with two pay-roll robberies aggregating $4,000. However, three other men were arrested in a sweep of detectives along Broadway and held in connection with the outstanding accomplishment of robbers during the week, the $200,000 mail truck jewelry holdup of Wednesday evening.

About the time that Major General Smedley D. Butler, late of the U. S. marine corps, now commissioner of police in Philadelphia, landed in New York with 500 of his best men for a parade on Fifth avenue, Hyman Kapilow, a contracting carpenter, was beginning to blink his eyes and rub his head in the pastoral quiet of a suburban vacant lot where he had been dumped from an automobile by three zealous and efficient young gunmen. He had been crowded to the curb by another car as he drove along humming a tune to pay off his men. While one of the young men kept the engine running, another persuaded Mr. Kapilow to accept a lift in their car, and a third, waving a pistol, kept a few bystanders at bay. After a long ride through outlying sections, Kapilow was relieved of $2,200 in pay envelopes and kicked out of the running machine. He did not know why they ejected him, but thought it was because he didn't have any money left to pay his fare.

Andrew Bresiani, paymaster of a tile company, was blinking and rubbing much after the manner of Kapilow at about the same time. He had received a playful nudge on the straw hat from one of four young motorists who waylaid him and took $1,800 in pay envelopes.

And as the two paymasters wearily took their way across lots to secluded police stations to report their experiences and borrow carfare, bands blatted on Fifth avenue to speed the marching feet of the finest patrolmen of Philadelphia and New York and their commanders, General Butler and Commissioner Richard Enright. It was a Flag-day ceremony which brought Philadelphia's gray legion to measure strides with the majeste blue boys of the greatest city. General Butler, after months of discouragement in the effort to instill the marine corps principles of tidelity and honor and create marine corps efficiency in a police force which was known as the most corrupt in America, had found 500 men of whom he had reason to be proud.

He wanted to display them as a reassuring and heartening demonstration. The old legend that Philadelphians do not have carriage blocks in front of their homes because the cops would steal them is about to be dispelled in part. And he seemed very proud of his nucleus of honesty as he marched with his men from the ferry landing to the city hall where they compared well with the stalwarts of New York.

The three men held for the master crime of the week in New York are John Monforte, 24 years old, and Edward and John Diamond, 21 and 28. Edward and John are said to be no kin to one another or to the famous Diamond brothers. Maurice and Joe now awaiting execution in Sing Sing for the bank-messenger murders of last fall. Edward Diamond is said to be an experienced youth, however, and it was stated that he was on $20,000 bail for a silk robbery committed some months ago, when taken in Saturday for the mail holdup. Monforte has been on $25,000 bail for a holdup committed several weeks ago.

W. M. HARDY QUITS INDUSTRIAL BOARD

Claims Bad Mistake by State Bureau in Sponsoring $70,000,000 Road Bond Issue.

Rome, Ga., June 14.—Wilson M. Hardy, vice president of the Citizens-Floyd Bank and Trust company, of Rome, and former president of the Georgia Country Bankers' association, has resigned as a director of the Georgia Industrial bureau, declaring as a cause that he cannot endorse the program of that organization, wherein it sponsors a $70,000,000 bond issue for roads, has resigned it was announced here today.

Mr. Hardy declares, in his letter of resignation, that the state "could hardly make a more serious mistake than to saddle posterity with $70,000,000 of bonds for roads that will be worn out many years before the bonds are paid. This is not to be interpreted as meaning that I am not an advocate of good roads; on the contrary, I am an enthusiast on the subject, but I do not believe that the conditions of our roads is affecting seriously the development of our industrial resources," Mr. Hardy adds.

Democratic Women Delegates Card Indexed by Smith Girls

:: TAMMANY WILL CATER TO ALL THEIR FANCIES ::

BY MAXINE DAVIS.

New York, June 14.—Little democratic girl delegates to the big city convention here had better look sharp. Al Smith will get them if they don't watch out!

For that seasoned New Yorker and his henchwomen, with all the guile that city folk are said to exercise for the purpose of luring country strangers, have laid a trap of friendliness for all women delegates to the democratic conclave next week to offer hospitality with one hand and take in votes with another.

Women on the Smith committee have been working busily on an analysis of the entire feminine contingent of the whole convention, in order to know them when they come. They have secured the names and whole history of each woman member of every state delegation from Alabama to Porto Rico. They have discovered every horror in their hidden pasts.

They have ascertained whether each delegate is married or single, what her vocation is, and what her avocation. If she is a business woman, their records now show exactly what her business is and probably how she climbed into her present position. They know if she is just a homebody with a broad outlook.

But most important of all, they have listed her exact political position, convictions, and degree of influence. They have exhumed the outstanding details of her political activity, her environment and personality.

And when each woman delegate comes to town, she will be met by a member of the Smith committee as nearly congenial as possible. When the analysis is completed on Monday, each woman member will be assigned certain delegates. Thus a Smith business woman will meet a business woman delgate from Oregon and Alabama and Illinois, and a commercial artist Smith woman will meet commercial artists from all over the country. Women doctor delegates will be greeted by Smith adherents who speak their professional language—and so on down the line.

Among the prominent women on this committee are Miss Marbury, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Miss Nancy Cook, Mrs. John Blair, Miss Nina M. Bruere, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Mrs. Alice Campbell Good, Mrs. Raymond V. Ingersoll, Mrs. Marie Lydon, Mrs. Henry Moskowitz, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Miss Judith C. Ver Planck, Mrs. Norman Mack and many others.

Thus these brilliant and clever women will promptly meet and probably overwhelm the delegates with their emphatic and logical arguments for Smith. They will endear the name of Smith to those who are strangers in the metropolis by their prompt interest and good will. Who knows how far a campaign of friendliness can go?

THIRD PARTY MEET GATHERS TUESDAY

St. Paul, Minn., June 14.—The program for the National Farmer-Labor-Progressive convention, or third party gathering, will be completed Monday at a meeting of the arrangements committee, William Mahony, St. Paul labor leader and chairman of the committee, announced tonight.

The committee met here today and sub-committees were appointed to take up various details of the program for the convention, which will begin here Tuesday, and which is expected to place a third ticket in the field for the fall elections.

Arrangements for the meeting have been complicated by uncertainty as to the number of delegates that will attend. Credentials for approximately 700 delegates have been received, but whether all or more will come was not certain tonight, according to Mr. Mahony.

Although Senator Robert M. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, has repudiated the convention to be held here, Mr. Mahony said resolutions probably would be passed, instructing the executive committee to indorse LaFollette for president if he is chosen to run for that office by the conference for progressive political action to be held in Cleveland early in July.

The arrangements committee named the following sub-committee on rules and temporary organization: Tom Ayres, South Dakota; W. H. Green, Nebraska, and Joseph Manley, Illinois. The full committee will meet again tomorrow.

Key Heads Body Formed To Fight For Rich Estate

Macon, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—The Martin Key association was formed today at a meeting here of about 250 descendants of Martin and Nancy Bibb Key, and plans made to conduct a court fight for one billion dollars' worth of real estate in the heart of New York city, which they claim belongs to them. The association will work in conjunction with the Bibb-Key association formed several months ago in Alabama, and investigations will be made at once to determine if there is a chance of the families recovering the property.

James L. Key, ex-mayor of Atlanta, was elected president of the association, and F. H. Hattick, of Macon, chosen treasurer. Miss Julia Carmichael, of Statesboro, Ga., was made secretary.

The president was instructed to appoint a board of directors to consist of five members. These directors will make direct investigations to determine whether the property in question exists, and whether it will be feasible to make an attempt to recover it. It is desired to locate the property and settle for all time whether there is anything in the reports that there is an estate that has been handed down from generation to generation that rightfully belongs to the family. It has been shown that family traditions have told of a large tract of land granted by the king of England to Martin and Nancy Bibb before the revolutionary war. This land is supposed to be located in the heart of greater New York. None of the persons present at today's meeting could say definitely whether or not the report is true.

The meeting was called by Dr. W. C. Bryant, of College Park, Ga.

The directors will be named by the president within a few days, and no time will be lost in beginning the work of ascertaining the truth of the rumors.

20,000,000 POUND CROP OF TOBACCO PREDICTED HERE

Moultrie, Ga., June 14.—A survey made by tobacco demonstrators with headquarters in Moultrie indicates that south Georgia will produce approximately 20,000,000 pounds of bright leaf tobacco this season. It is believed that the tobacco will bring an average price of about 30 cents a pound, or a total of $6,000,000.

The curing season is at hand and many barns have already been filled. The date of the opening of the market is uncertain but the warehousemen in all important centers are making preparations for the opening date. The tobacco crop as a whole is said to be as fine as was ever produced in the state. Weather conditions in June have been particularly favorable.

Unwed Mother Wins Her Baby By Court Order

St. Louis, Mo., June 14.—Six-month-old Thomas Poepping, Jr., was back with his mother Saturday night.

"He's mine! I'm just tickled to death, said bob-haired 18-year-old Fannie Lockwood, the mother, as she hugged the infant and dried her eyes of happy tears.

The baby is Fannie's and although Fannie hasn't ever been married, she's a fit person to bring him up, Judge Erwin Ossing decided in the court of domestic relations.

Two days after last Christmas, Fannie gave the infant, then two weeks old, to Thomas Poepping, a handsome opera singer, and he promised to care for it, she said.

Poepping later told the court that he was afraid the girl would kill it, and joined with the city board of children's guardians in trying to prove that she was unfit to rear Thomas, Jr.

For four months the baby was gone. Poepping had left it on the front steps of an orphanage that winter night, with a milk bottle full of hot water to keep it alive. The orphanage tended the child and gave it for "trial adoption" to a wealthy, childless couple who called it their own.

Last month Fannie became importunate, and Poepping told her he didn't know where the baby was, and that he wasn't going to marry her.

Fannie brought assault charges against him, and habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the foundling, which a police sergeant had traced. Charges are still pending against Poepping.

HERRIOT CABINET ALL NEW FIGURES

government is confined to a few months as food dictator in the war. The premier, however, has behind him a record of twenty years' successful administration in Lyons, which passes for the best-governed city in France. The combination is conceded on all sides to contain an immense amount of energy and a full measure of audacity.

Gloved-Hand Policy.

The premier has given repeated indications that his foreign policy will be that of the gloved hand, which will first of all be offered to Great Britain—as soon as the chamber has passed upon the ministerial declaration and accorded the cabinet a vote of confidence. It is expected after M. Herriot and the British prime minister, Ramsay MacDonald, have gone over the European situation, arrangements will be made for a full allied conference with reference to application of the Dawes plan. The allies will then meet the Germans in an endeavor to bring about a decisive and final agreement on reparations and prepare the way for entry of the Germans into the league of nations and an eventual pact of mutual guarantees covering all Europe.

Clementel's Job Hardest.

M. Clementel will have perhaps the most difficult task of the new government in funding France's floating debt and finding money to continue the reconstruction of the devastated regions. He has the advantage of wide acquaintance with the bankers of the world through his connection with the International Chamber of Commerce and has extended experience in economics and finance that equips him for the great task.

The new government has a majority estimated all the way from 30 to 100 to rely on at the beginning, which is deemed rather narrow. The opposition, however, will, it is believed, give M. Herriot full opportunity to show what he intends to do before offering obstruction.

The French ministry, as presented by Premier Herriot to President Doumergue this evening, is as follows:

Premier and minister of foreign affairs—Edouard Herriot.
Minister of war—General Maurice Nollet.
Minister of justice—Rene Renoult.
Minister of the interior—Camille Chautemps.
Minister of finance—Etienne Clementel.
Minister of the navy—Jacques Dumesnil.
Minister of commerce—M. Raynaldy.
Minister of public works—Victor Peytral.
Minister of education—Francois Albert.
Minister of labor and health—Justin Godart.
Minister of the colonies—Edouard Daladier.
Minister of pensions—Edouard Bovier-Lapierre.
Minister of agriculture—M. Queuille.
Minister of liberated regions—Victor Dalbiez.
Posts and telegraph—Pierre Robert.
Merchant marine—Leon Meyer.
Aviation—Laurent Hynac.
Technical instruction—Vincent de Moro-Giafferi.

There are 14 ministers, instead of 13, as in the old cabinet. M. Herriot, it is said, hesitated to increase the expense of government by enlarging the ministry, but wanted to get rid of the fateful thirteen.

The new cabinet will meet Monday morning under M. Doumergue and will appear before the chamber Tuesday.

GEORGIA REDMEN IN ANNUAL MEET NEXT WEDNESDAY

Columbus, Ga., June 14.—Plans were completed here today for the opening of the state convention of Redmen, which is to be in session Wednesday and Thursday.

C. P. Metheney, of Augusta, great sachem, will preside over the deliberations of the body. C. R. McKee, of Columbus, great senior sagamore, will be elevated to the post of great sachem during the convention, according to the order of succession.

The convention will open Wednesday morning with a public session. In the afternoon the Redmen will go to Fort Benning and spend that portion of the day inspecting the reservation and hearing army officers who have spent years in the Indian reservation in Oklahoma.

Thursday will be given over to business and the election of officers.

Woman Tries Suicide.

Columbus, Ga., June 14.—Despondent over her physical condition, Mrs. Mattie Brannon, 28, mother of two children, took almost two ounces of poison at her home here tonight. She is in the city hospital in an unconscious condition and is not expected to survive the night.

John Litel and Wife Lead "Married in June" List

MR. AND MRS. JOHN B. LITEL

Ladie-e-e-s and gentlem-e-e-en—

Meet the latest recruits in the list of June brides and grooms whose daintily-scented and tinted letters have marched in column of squads through the mails of The Atlanta Constitution for the past two days.

They are Mr. and Mrs. John B. Litel, and their introduction in this little yarn is equivalent to letting the cgat out of the bag, spilling the beans, solving the mystery and otherwise throwing light upon the cause for the party to be staged at the Atlanta theater the first three nights of this week by The Constitution and the Baldwin Players as joint hosts.

For be it known to one and all, divers and sundry persons and to whom it may concern, that the debonnaire Litel and his charming wife were themselves joined in the holy bonds of matrimony on a sunny June day just a few years ago, and as a consequence they both have a tender spot in their hearts for all who trod the rose-strewn path of Cupid to the altar during the month of roses.

The chief of the Baldwin Players was in a particularly receptive mood when The Constitution suggested its plan to present a pair of tickets to the sparkling comedy, "Here Comes the Bride," to be offered all next week at the Atlanta, to June brides who communicated by letter with the "June Bride" editor of The Constitution and supplied their names, addresses, date of marriage and name of the lucky man.

Saturday's flood of mail in response to this joint invitation to June brides and grooms to be guests at the Atlanta theater the first three nights of this week kept an extra office boy constantly on the run between The Constitution and the theater.

At the theater, attaches were busily engaged in mailing out tickets, and all details for a rousing good time for the brides and their escorts were in progress.

All brides of Greater Atlanta who were wedded in June of any year are eligible to apply to the "June Bride" editor for tickets. Those who desire to apply from now on, however, must make special haste, as no letters received after noon Monday will be considered.

MOBILE SWELTERS AS HEAT REACHES 98-DEGREE MARK

Mobile, Ala., June 14.—A new heat record for the present summer in Mobile, and one not often reached during the month of June in the history of the local weather bureau, was established at 3 o'clock this afternoon when the thermometer reached 98 degrees. This announcement was made by the weather bureau officials.

This is four degrees higher than the maximum temperature recorded at Mobile last summer. It is three degrees higher than the previous high record made this season which was 95 degrees, registered on Tuesday.

POOR AIR PRESSURE CAUSED EXPLOSION

der shouted immediately following the blast.

He had telephone receivers over his ears, Smith said, and not catching the command plainly, asked the officer standing above him to repeat it. This, the officer, whose name he did not know, tried to do, Smith said, but was choked by the gas and could not speak again.

Eugene Burke, a sight-setter, told of his narrow escape through a hatchway down into the powder rooms. Rushing out on deck, he shouted the alarm of fire, but it was some time before the other sailors paid heed to his warning. They believed it was a fire drill, the witness said.

Officer Has Another Theory.

Lieut. Commander Reinecke, chief gunnery officer of the Mississippi, was on the witness stand during the forenoon. He expressed the opinion that the explosion was not caused by any mechanical defect, but rather by some mistake made by the sweating members of the crew during the excitement of their spirited effort to establish a new target practice record to add to the long list of victories the turret already held.

Still another theory that the explosion was caused by some member of the crew failing to remove a heavy paper bag from one of the powder bags crammed into the breech, was advanced by Ensign F. W. Parsons, in charge of the lower powder handling room below the turret.

"The first intimation I had of anything being wrong was when I saw men coming down a ladder and water gushing down after them," Parsons said. "Then yellow and red gas poured through the trap door from the turret. I commanded my men to close all doors and get the powder out of the hoist."

Inspected Powder.

"Did you inspect the powder that was being used in the guns?" Parsons was asked.

"Yes, some of the bags were sewed in places."

"Were the bags used at the time of the explosion sent to the turret with index cards attached?"

"I don't know."

"Was there any order given to remove the tags?"

"I don't know."

"Have you ever been instructed to remove the tags from powder bags?"

"No."

It was announced Saturday that the Mississippi had been ordered to the Mare Island yards, San Francisco, for repairs. The wet powder has been removed from the magazine and the three guns taken from the turret.

MATERIAL DAMAGE TO BATTLESHIP SMALL.

Washington, June 14.—Material damage to the battleship Mississippi by the turret explosion was surprisingly small, the navy department was informed today in a dispatch from the battle fleet. The damage within the turret seemed to have been confined to the motors, wiring, optical instruments and other equipment.

INJURED YOUTH ENLISTED HERE.

Monroe, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—William Homer Ball, who was injured in the turret explosion on the battleship Mississippi off the San Pedro, Cal., coast Friday, was the son of B. E. Ball, of Tucker, Ga., his father and mother both being dead.

Young Ball was reared at Tucker, but for a few years previous to his enlistment at Atlanta on October 2, 1922, had worked for the King Hardware company in Atlanta, and on the farms of his uncle, W. L. Ball, and Grady Verner, a few miles from Monroe. He left here in the fall of 1922, and a short while later relatives heard of his enlistment in the navy.

Ball is 22 years of age and was very popular among all who knew him here, being a young man of intelligence and industry. He has a brother living at Winder and his grandparents reside at Tucker.

PLANS FOR WILSON MEMORIAL COLLEGE

ty, its curriculum, its method of teaching, and its student body. The subjects which will be taught will be those in which Mr. Wilson was most interested: Government, history, economics, international relations and cognate subjects as a backbone, with such other subjects as are necessary to make a well-rounded education, but always with the subjects broadly classed as the "humanities" taking the forefront. Languages will be taught not as mental calesthenics, but as a means of getting first-hand at the literature of the world. Sciences will be taught from the standpoint of the history of them and a general understanding of them rather than in an attempt to make scientists of the students. There will be no attempt to emulate the expensive laboratory equipment of German scientific universities.

Method of Instruction.

The method of instruction will be preceptorial, following closely the methods of instruction followed at Cambridge and Oxford—that is to say that an attempt will be made to give the student a broad general knowledge of his subject by lectures, explainations, reading and so forth rather than to concern itself with the mere "piling up" of credit units.

Usually four years will be required for a student to finish the course of instruction provided. However, in the case of any student who can justly finish his course in a shorter time, every effort will be made to have him do it, and to help him. The whole idea of the institution will be to break the 'lock-step" by which now a student is necessarily held back to the pace of his slower neighbor.

Initially the student body will not be large, nor is there any intention on the part of anyone connected with the institution to vie with the larger universities and colleges in the matter of the numerical strength of its student body. Approximately 200 students will be the limit under the present plans. These 200, however, will be selected, chosen boys, and each of them will be required to pass suitable mental tests, demonstrating his ability to accept such a course as will be provided, in addition to giving satisfactory evidences of high character and satisfactory preparation.

Faculty of Notables.

The faculty will be a distinguished one. Members of it will be chosen, after of course their scholarly qualification are considered, for their knowledge of and their sincere agreement with the principles of Woodrow Wilson and their ability to import this knowledge to the students under their direction, but each member of it must have distinguished himself in his particular line, must be and must keep abreast of the times. According to college authorities it would be impossible to secure such a faculty at the outset for any new institution except such an institution as this, with its purpose of keeping alive the ideals of Mr. Wilson, nor without the powerful assistance which Mr. Wilson's friends have promised in getting together such a body of distinguished teachers. For the most part they will be selected from among the personal friends of Mr. Wilson.

No attempt will be made to open the doors of the college until adequate finances are in sight both to provide adequate accommodations for the students and faculty, and to provide for the maintenance of the institution on a basis of the highest standards. In actual money this will mean two and a half million dollars, according to educational experts. Already there has been subscribed approximately one million of this amount.

Legion in Charge.

The remainder of the funds will be secured under the leadership of the American Legion of Georgia, to whom the plans for the college have been outlined, and who have agreed at the invitation of college authorities to take the leadership in raising the remainder of the funds necessary to build and endow the college. Not only has the state department of the American Legion in its Savannah convention just concluded agreed to undertake itself the raising of funds, but resolutions adopted at this convention inviting the national department of the legion to participate will be pressed at the national convention of this body in October, to the end that the entire organization of the American Legion may participate in this memorial to its commander-in-chief.

Many of the trustees of the new institution will be from among the close associates of Mr. Wilson, and many of these will be members of the American Legion. Others will be selected from the American Legion itself as representing those who have the greatest right to carry on the work of Woodrow Wilson. Two requisites will be of prime importance in the selection not only of trustees, but of everyone connected with the college. They must be Christian men and women, and they must be thoroughly in accord with the ideals in government of Woodrow Wilson.

A Christian Spirit.

The entire spirit of the institution will be Christian, as was the life and spirit of Woodrow Wilson. And while the institution will not be sectarian in any sense, its religious atmosphere will be under the guidance of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the steadying influence of this church will guarantee that it does not depart from the high purposes for which it is established.

The thought in the minds of those interested in founding the new college (it will not be a university) is that some day, from among our boys we may develop another Woodrow Wilson. By giving them the same kind of education that Daniel Webster, Woodrow Wilson, and others who have been world leaders, have received. And if perchance no other outstanding man shall arise who may be comparable to these, every boy who attends the institution will have been given at least a part of that spirit of service, and those ideals of justice which were given to the world by Woodrow Wilson, that the ideals for which he fought and steadfast to which he died may not perish from the earth.

COOLIDGE'S VIEWS ON SAVING MONEY

a man, a lawyer, who has always lived in one-half of a rented house at $35 a month, and he has never even owned an automobile—can you tell me that a lawyer who lives that way can be an able lawyer?"

People could not understand how a man who could have a money-making career if he chose to should put it aside. And in truth, it was a rather remarkable decision for Coolidge, as a college graduate and an adequately trained lawyer, to put aside a money-making career and focus his energy and ability on a wholly public career. It was remarkable considering the time when the decision was made by Coolidge as a young man. That was about 25 years ago, in the late '90s of the last century, the days of Hanna and McKinley, which were one of the most materialistic eras in our history.

But when Coolidge turned to public life, he turned to it as a permanent career and dismissed the idea of a money-making professional career. He knew exactly what he was doing, and had what were to him and under his circumstances satisfactory reasons for his decision.

Has Clear Grasp.

In this matter of money and his own career he had thought it all out and he had a perfectly clear grasp of the fundamental philosophy of the relation of an individual human being to the matter of making and having money. At least, he had a clear grasp of one kind of philosophy about this sort of thing, and he made that particular philosophy his own. Also, as will be shown by a story I shall tell, he had a sound grasp on the older attitude of the American people toward unnecessary or doubtful expenditure of the public funds.

Coolidge's attitude toward money, both public and private, arose out of his background. When Coolidge's political fortunes advanced to the point where the newspaper men following him had occasion to come into contact with his personal background, when they began to know something of his father, Colonel John Coolidge, and the latter's circumstances, they discovered that Colonel Coolidge in his station in life is something more than merely a Vermont farmer and retired village storekeeper. In clothes and in his manner of living Colonel Coolidge practices the same simplicity as his son. And he practices it for exactly the same reason, namely, that he likes to live that way better than he would like to live some other way.

How Coolidge Saw It.

Once we had observed this fact, we could see the light it threw on President Coolidge's attitude toward money. President Coolidge is his father's only heir. He always knew that in the course of time he would inherit that little Vermont village fortune. The $1,500 to $2,500 of annual interest on it (for President Coolidge, like his father, is one who will stick to something like 4 per cent and safety) is not much, but it is the difference between something and nothing.

President Coolidge, in turn, has two sons, and for these sons his philosophy of life is the same as it was for himself, namely, that a fortune is a handicap rather than an advantage. On the day when Coolidge was inaugurated as president, one of his sons was working on a Massachusetts farm at ordinary field-hand wages. Coolidge wanted his children to have the same attitude toward money that he himself had and his father had. He wanted them to need to work. He wanted them to need to save.

The knowledge of thees circumstances about Coolidge's background threw a world of light on him, his personal relation to money, and his public attitude toward money.

Here was a man who, although he had never earned, until he became president more than $3,000 a year, except for the years when he had the salary of governor of Massachusetts, and later as vice president, in which offices his necessary expenses were more than appropriate to his salary—here was a man who had no fortune, who did not try to make one, who was content with little, who kept his family in one end of a rented house at $35 a month rent.

But, at the same time, here was a man who had a perfectly orthodox attitude toward money and the relation of government to money In his economics he is as sound as a banker. The arguments of bolsheyism bounded off his hard mind as if it were New England granite. In his mental attitude, his notions about government and property and organized society, he is a pillar of the ordinary conservative American point of view.

It was the curious case of a man who very much poorer than most labor leaders (some offiicals of labor unions get salaries as high as $20,000 a year), who made less money year by year than most locomotive engineers, but who, nevertheless, believed as thoroughly in the right of every other man to make as much and keep as much as he could—he believed as thoroughly in this as he does in the tenets of the Congregational church.

The primary explanation, of course, is that Coolidge does not care for money himself and has a philosophy of life which probably makes him feel a littel sorry for men who have a great deal of money. Coolidge was in a position to have an ideal American point of view about money. That little Vermont fortune of thirty to fifty thousand dollars or so was, according to his personal philosophy, as much as he felt it would be good for his boys to inherit. At the same time it was just enough to save him from the fear of poverty, and from the envy, or any of the other angry attitudes toward other people's money which stark poverty and fear of the future sometimes brings to men.

Story of Coolidge.

Aside from having this fundamental point of view, his personal philosophy of life, about money, Coolidge had a practical, commonsense and a shrewdly cautious prevision in the field of politics where politics touches money. He knew that the American voter condemns unnecessary public extravagance and vents his disapproval on public officials who practice extravagance with the public funds. At least, the American voter used to have this point of view at the time the events of this story occurred. It is one of the best of the stories that Coolidge's friends tell about him.

Coolidge was in the Massachusetts legislature in 1915, the year the San Francisco fair was held. Massachusetts, like most states, sent an exhibit. The legislature appointed a committee to inspect the state's exhibit and appropriated $25,000 for expenses. Coolidge was among those put on the committee. The day the news appeared in the papers Coolidge was attending a class reunion at Amherst, and the following conversation took place between Coolidge and a classmate:

Classmate—I see they've put you on that committee to visit the fair at San Francisco.

Coolidge—Yep.

Classmate—That'll be a fine thing for you. It'll be a nice trip. You'll see a lot of the country. Never been far west, have you?

Coolidge—Nope.

See Massachusetts First.

Classmate—Well, this is a great opportunity for you to see the Rocky mountains and California, and all that.

Coolidge—Maybe.

Classmate—It sure will be fine. Guess you've never had as nice a trip as that, have you?

Coolidge—Nope.

Classmate—That'll be fine. You'll see a lot of new things.

Coolidge—Not goin'.

Classmate—Not going? Why not?

Coolidge—See Massachusetts first.

This laconic phrase was a slightly cryptic but clearly understood variation of the popular slogan made current at the time by the management of the fair, by which paraphrase Coolidge meant that for a man in Massachusetts politics it was more prudent to see his own state first than to see America first. But the additional and more important meaning was revealed some months later, when the succeeding legislature, having a factional complexion unfriendly to the preceding one, conducted an investigation of the junket and of the details of the expenditure of the $25,000—in which investigation Coolidge, by virtue of his cautious foresight about such matters, played the role of observer instead of victim.

GEORGIA SERENADERS AT GRAND THIS WEEK

Joe Brattain, former Tech boy whose song, "Dear Old Girl" of Delta Sigma Phi," has won great favor in the various chapter houses of the fraternity, comes back to Atlanta this week as a member of the well-known Georgia Serenaders, one of the oldest jazz band organizations in the country, which organization now heads the bill of vaudeville on Loew's circuit and which will be heard this week at Loew's Grand theater.

With Mr. Brattain will be several other Tech and Emory boys who were members of the original organization founded in 1921. Six outstanding young musicians formed the nucleus of the present organization, which has grown to nine members. In 1923 the Georgia Serenaders were headlined over the Loew vaudeville circuit. The organization then went to New Orleans, where it played at the Roosevelt hotel (formerly the Grunewald) for six months.

Sophie Tucker heard them play in New Orleans and they were signed up to appear regularly in her famous restaurant, the Carlton Terace, in Cleveland. It was here that they signed their new contract with Marcus Loew to appear again as headliners on the Loew circuit.

Save for a higher polish, greater assurance, broader viewpoint and enhanced technique, the Georgia Serenaders is still virtually the same organization that began to carve its niche in the hall of fame four years ago. It employs almost every instrument known to jazz band music, and from notices of its recent successes, it promises to make a big hit at Loew's Grand this week.

LANGLEY WILL URGE CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM

Lee J. Langley, of Rome, Ga., representative from Floyd county in the state legislature, will introduce two important bills at the coming session of the legislature, it became known Thursday.

One of these bills provides for a civil service system for the state, to be charged with regulation of employment, government and removal of certain employees of the several branches and departments of the state government; would create a civil service commission for the state and provide for adoption of rules for its operation.

Representative Langley's bill does not affect any person employed in any state department at the time the bill becomes law, but does affect all appointments embraced within the provisions of the act made after it becomes law. It provides for open and competitive examinations for testing fitness of applicants for the various positions.

Provisions of Bill.

The bill also provides for appointment of a clerk and examiner for the civil service commission, for the keeping of records of the commission and the management of the office. Such person is also required to make a semi-annual survey of the various departments and branches of state governmental activity and recommend whether the proper number of employees for the work to be done are provided in each, to recommend advisable reductions in forces and other economics which will not impair the efficiency of the service.

Secretaries and stenographers of the various department heads who handle the private correspondence of their chiefs are exempt, under the bill, from the civil service requirements.

Penalty for Voters.

Mr. Langley's second bill provides penalties for all qualified voters who fail to cast their ballots in all primary elections held to fill state offices in Georgia.

The bill requires any voter who failed to vote at a primary election for one or more state house officers to file with the tax collector of his county within sixty days a legal excuse in writing for the failure to vote.

Failure to do this bars the voter from the right to vote in the next succeeding primary for the election of state house officers.

Representative Langley will make a determined fight for the enactment of his bills into law at this summer's session of the legislature, he states.

R. R. WOOD'S FUNERAL WILL BE HELD TODAY

Funeral services for Robert R. Wood, vice president of the George Muse Clothing company and widely-known Atlantan, who died suddenly Saturday morning at a local hospital, will be held at 5 o'clock this afternoon from the residence, 63 West Thirteenth street, Rev. W. W. Memminger officiating. Interment will be in West View cemetery.

Mr. Wood, who was 58 years of age, was a native of Covington, Ga., but came to Atlanta as a young man and became connected with the Muse Clothing company 32 years ago. He served continuously with the firm, and several years ago was promoted to the vice presidency of the company.

He was prominent in business and social affairs alike, being a member of the Piedmont Driving club, and was identified with many civic movements. He was a member of All Saints' Episcopal church, being a vestryman.

Mr. Wood is survived by his widow, Mrs. Jane Boyd Wood, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. W. W. Boyd, prominent Atlantans, and one son, Robert R. Wood, Jr.

OSTEEN AND SMITH BONDS ARE ASSESSED

J. H. Osteen and Joe Smith, two young white men who have been detained at police station since last Sunday night, charged with the shooting of Robert McLarty, were brought before Judge G. H. Howard Saturday on a writ of habeas corpus and their bonds assessed at $500 each. Their petition alleged that they were being held in prison illegally. The law firm of Smith & Watson represented Osteen and Smith.

Lowering of Money Rates To Aid Sound Business Ventures---Platt

BY C. H. PLATT.

New York, June 14.—(Special to The Constitution.)—The stock market was stronger in the past week than at any time in months. There had been some good rallies previously, but they had been due entirely to short covering and were followed by new periods of weakness. In the past week the main cause for strength was to be found in new buying. There has been an enormous investment demand for a long time, but it has been confined largely to the highest-grade issues. Now with money so easy and plentiful there is investment going on in many of the second-grade stocks where the continuation of present dividends is fairly well assured. The reason for the change in market condition is found in the expectation that the reduction in federal reserve bank rates, the second cut in a few weeks, will be quite stimulating to business. This lowering of loaning rates is expected to later on bring about a new inflation, but for some months to come it will be merely an aid in sound business ventures. Because of this outlook many people have taken to buying stock for market profit in the past few days who were either bearish on stocks or indifferent to them for a long time. There are possibilities that this will lead to a strong and active stock market through the summer. It is also expected that the public will take a prominent part in the trading before very long.

Public Interested.

As a whole, without considering the reserve bank rate reduction, there were reasons for an improvement in business and in the stock market before long. Thus there has been no accumulation of unsold goods in many lines. Where orders fell off, manufacturers and sellers merely cut down on their production to a point equal to the new demand. This saved any demoralizing reductions in prices and prevented heavy "distress" selling in many lines. It kept the underlying position sound even in the face of the very severe decline in the volume of business that has occurred. Credit continued healthy and it has merely been a case of restoring general confidence to bring about better conditions in trade and industry. The slowing up has been more a psychological than an economic condition. It has been due to political developments that caused uneasiness and not to any real fundamental weakness in the business structure. There are indications that the worst of this slowing up was passing when the reserve bank rate cut came, and this will quicken the revival. Of course, there cannot be much gain in activity in the summer, but there can be and is expected to be in the early fall. It is in anticipation of this that many pools in stocks were formed several weeks ago. There is also a feeling that political developments will be more favorable. The cut in tax rates is a fairly good factor now and there seems to be every indication that the next session of congress will carry this work further. The bond market has been almost "boiling over" for some time, for there has been a greater demand than suply in many issues and some of them advances several points from the last week of May to date.

Huge sums that have been seeking investment in bonds and could not be placed at the desired rates of return because of lack of offerings of bonds have been overflowing into the better grade stocks, first in the preferred issues and more recently in good common stocks. This was particularly noticeable in the dividend rails and the best of the public utilities. It is now taking place in many of the sounder industrial stocks. The one place in the market that has been rather gloomy has been in the oil shares, but they have had a moderate recovery as a sympathetic move with the rest of the market, but even in them there is a bullish feeling for a long pull. The sugar stocks had been depressed for weeks but they have started to advance again and have shown a strong trend as a result of rising prices for raw and refined sugar and an outlook for much better demand for this commodity. Although the steel corporation had another very disquieting loss in its unfilled tonnage statement, the steel stocks were strong in anticipation of better conditions in the steel market during the fall.

Copper Shares Quiet.

Copper shares were quiet and took little part in the general improvement. Various specialties that have pools operating in them were taken up by these groups and in some cases had large advances. Stocks of department store and mail order houses have been in favor and have been strong for some time when many others had previously been weak, but they appear to have possibilities for further advance and have been well bought recently.

Call money loaning at 2 per cent. and in some private transactions at less than that, and the successful sale of government certificates on a 2 3-4 per cent basis showed just how easy the money market is. There were time loans for a period of four to six months negotiated at under 40 per cent. Commercial paper and other loans were made at lower rates than in years. The slowing up in business was a cause for releasing several billion dollars that have been seeking profitable employment or investment. The money situation will stimulate business now, but later on, it will probably be a cause for inflation. This may be a year or more in the future, but it looks as if a new era of rising prices is starting that will tend to spread. Therefore, it is probable that low loaning rates will not last very long and that there will first be a gradual rise in time funds and later on in call money. It is not unlikely that by the first part of 1925, there may be a resumption of a 4 per cent rate for federal reserve bank discount rates, if the expected expansion in borrowing takes place in the meantime. This is looking far ahead. For the next few months, there is every reason to believe that the general condition of the money market and of trade and industry will be a healthy one, due to plentiful money supplies at low rates.

Bonds Snapped Up.

Bonds were snapped up whenever they were offered, either in new issues or in the more desirabl eseasoned issues. Instances were related by bond traders during the week, as in previous weeks, where there wer eadvances of a point or two in a single day in some issues. This demand for bonds is likely to carry prices somewhat higher, but as a whole the bond market has discounted the present position of money. The expansion in general business will cause a revival of demand for funds soon and these will be drawn out of the bond market, and there will be increasing speculation and that will cut down on the amount of money available for the bond market. Therefore, after some further advance in prices for the highest grade investments, there is likely to start a slow easing in prices. When the point of inflation is in sight, as it may be at the end of this year, it is probable that bond prices will then decline further.

Although there was an upset in the French political affairs, the general trend of foreign exchange was higher. There are many indications that the Dawes plan is near to general acceptance, and that will mean much better conditions in Europe.

Cold and rainy weather in large sections of the country has continued to affect the oil market unfavorably. Many of the mid-continent refiners have an enormous accumulation of gasoline on their hands and even thought the present consumption of gasoline is greater than the new supply, the accumulated stocks are too much for the market. The leading oil authorities are very optimistic over the outlook, as a further gain in consumptive and decline in productive power will occur, judging by all present trends in the industry.

Car Sales Slump.

Motor car sales dropped off very sharply since March 1, but are showing a moderate increase this month. Curtailment of production came too late to prevent a great accumulation of unsold cars, but there are hopes that the present restricted output will allow the manufacturers to work off their surplus cars before the end of the year. If the general improvement in business that is mentioned above does develop, it should bring about a decided increase in automobile sales.

Copper is weak and the demand is low. A slight improvement developed during the latter days of the week, and it is hoped that the industry will meet with better conditions before the end of the month. After many months of greater demand than supply, stocks of copper have been accumulating during recent weeks. The mine and smelter production have been gradually reduced, and so it would not take much in the way of revival in buying to bring about a smart recovery in the copper trade.

Steel orders on hand are lower than they have been at any time in years. There is a great shortage of supplies on hand, however, and so the decline in unfilled tonnage for April and May has probably been due in a large part to the using up of surplus stocks of steel instead of placing orders for new supplies. Consumers have also allowed their orders to get very close to their needs, that is, in place of putting orders for weeks ahead of the actual need of the steel, consumers have waited until a short time before they wanted the steel, and then have put in their orders for it. As a result it would not take much to start a real revival in steel buying. It is possible that this may start at once, but it is more likely to be put off until later in the summer. Some steel market authorities look for some enormous buying of steel products during July and August.

Cotton had several reactions and rallies, but as a whole showed a better tone. If there is to be a general improvement in business, which is indicated in some of the developments mentioned above, it is bound to have a reflection in better conditions in the cotton goods market. There is also a strong indication that the report of condition for June 25 will show a falling off from the May report for cotton, unless the weather is very good in the next 10 days.

BRUNSWICK MAYOR OFFERS PORT PLAN

Brunswick, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—In view of the fact that the Georgia legislature is soon to convene in regular session, at which there is a probability that the state port question will again come up, Brunswick's state port committee, which has all along handled this city's fight for such a port, held a meeting today for the purpose of discussing the situation and deciding upon just what course should be pursued in the event the matter again comes up before the legislature.

Brunswick's position on this question, which it is believed locally is in thorough accord with a vast majority of the people of Georgia, is that this matter be entirely separated from politics; that a commission of outstanding citizens of the state be appointed to make an industrial survey of the state, calling in experts in the various lines of production and distribution and first determine whether the state really needs a port terminal, and if so, to recommend what its scope shall be and offer some financial plan for its realization.

Brunswick, however, has proceeded along the line of port development since this matter was first brought up in the state and is making preliminary plans to build terminals ample to handle products of the entire state, if a survey now being made shows that such terminals are needed in Georgia.

Mayor Outlines Views.

"The city of Brunswick," Mayor Malcolm McKinnon said Saturday, "now has before the legislature an amendment to the constitution of the state of Georgia giving this city additional authority to issue bonds for the building of municipal docks to the amount of seven per cent of her taxable values. We will ask the legislature to pass this measure at the approaching session and will then urge the people of the state to ratify same at the general election in November. While the bill amends the constitution of the state it applies only to the city of Brunswick.

"This step was taken in order to put Brunswick in position to build extensive terminals whenever her people feel that they are needed. Later should the state of Georgia desire to cooperate with this port and extend and enlarge the terminals that we plan building, we will then have something to offer Georgia. It is the present plan of the people of this city to build one unit and enlarge as commerce demands.

"We feel," the mayor continued, "that the voters of the state will gladly ratify our amendment when it is up for action in November, since it applies locally and will not benefit the port of Brunswick, but the entire state.

Federal Aid Offered.

"We have an efficient traffic bureau looking after the interests of the port and the members are making a complete survey of the state and other states of the southeast, with a view of having it completed by the time the amendment is voted upon. If this survey shows that an extensive terminal project is needed, we will immediately begin work on the unit planned. United States army engineers at Washington have expressed a willingness to aid Brunswick in designing these terminals. These men are experts and familiar with terminals all over the world, therefore at the proper time Brunswick will accept their kind offer and call upon them for ideas."

Not only the local port committee but the people of Brunswick generally are behind Mayor McKinnon in the plan he has outlined, and Glynn county's representatives in the house and senate will be urged to have the local measure passed as early as possible in the coming session of the legislature.

Miss Crawford Regains Voice And Will Preach Twice Today

Rheba Crawford, "angel of Broadway," now conducting a series of religious inspirational services in Atlanta, spent Friday night absolutely without the power of speech.

After her sermon at the auditorium Friday night, she suddenly lost all use of her vocal cords. From 10:15 p. m. Friday until 2:20 p. m. Saturday she could not even whisper. At the latter hour her voice returned as suddenly as it had gone and she found herself just as well able to talk, sing and whistle as she has always been. However, her doctor ordered her to absolute rest for the remainder of the day and Sunday, and she will not leave her room until it is time for her Sunday afternoon service at the Central Congregational church.

This is the second time, during the fourteen years of her experience as a public speaker, that Miss Crawford has lost her voice. The previous occasion was in New York, just after the police of that metropolis had haled her into court in an effort to prevent her holding any more street services on Broadway.

Won Right To Speak.

On that occasion Miss Crawford won her fight to maintain the ancient right of the Salvation Army—to which she then belonged—to hold open-air services on the city streets, but after leaving the court found, as she did last night, that her voice had deserted her. Then it came back again in two hours. This time, after it remained absent for fourteen hours, the doctor advised her to exercise the utmost care in her future use of her voice, for fear that some day it may go, not to return.

Miss Crawford, well known in Atlanta for her wartime work here as a member of the Salvation Army, will preach twice today at the Central Congregational church.

In the afternoon, at 3:30, the service will be for women only. No men will be allowed in the church edifice, even the ushers and other attendants being girls. The Y. W. C. A. and the Atlanta Girl Scouts have agreed to furnish an ample supply of workers for this occasion.

Will Preach Every Night.

Tonight, at 8 o'clock, Miss Crawford will conduct an open service at the church. She will also hold services there every night this week and it is expected that the capacity of the church auditorium will be taxed to its limit to accommodate the crowds.

Miss Crawford spoke to large crowds every night last week at the city auditorium, but it is thought probable that her loss of voice Friday night was caused by her efforts to make her voice carry through that vast building.

Lakewood Park Is Preparing Biggest July 4th in History

The announcement is authorized by the management at Lakewood park that a budget has been set aside that will warrant the production of a Fourth of July celebration this year that has never been equalled in Atlanta.

"It goes without saying that we will have a big harness race meet," said Secretary R. M. Striplin Saturday. "This sport is constantly growing in favor with the people of the south, and each year sees a greater number of blooded trotters and pacers owned in this section. Fully forty horses were entered for the races of last July at Lakewood, and there is good reason to expect a larger number this year. We are already making entries and one shipment from another state has been received at the track this week.

Put on Auto Races.

"We are also arranging to put on auto races and everyone who witnessed the events of last July 4 at Lakewood will remember the thrills and excitement furnished by the speed cars that afternoon. The prize money that we are putting up this year is large enough to bring a good number of fast cars and noted drivers to the track.

"We have contracted with a Chicago manufacturer of international reputation to put on our evening display of fireworks, which will include some novelties not shown here before. A special effort will be made to give the children a happy day and evening and we will make no charge for the grand stand to see the fireworks display.

"Our midway attractions and rides will be open all day, and the best band obtainable will furnish music for the occasion. Everything possible will be done to fill every minute of the time with something to amuse and entertain all ages and classes of visitors.

"An invitation has been extended to a speaker of more than national prominence to make the address of the day.

"Improvements in our grounds and additions to our walks and drives make it possible to care for more visitors than ever before and it is our wish to make the occasion an old-fashioned all-day picnic for families who may bring their baskets and have dinner on the grounds."

AVEN IS SCHEDULED BUSINESS CLUB HEAD

An Atlantan may be named president of the national organization of American Business clubs at the national convention, which will be held June 19 to 19 in Asheville, N. C., according to announcement at the regular weekly meeting of the Atlanta unit.

Dr. C. C. Aven, one of the older members of the club, is first vice president of the organization and may be named president at the convention, it is stated.

RESTAURANT'S STATUS IS FIXED BY COURTS

John Russell, assistant secretary of the Atlanta Convention bureau, wanted to know just exactly what, under the Georgia law, was the status of a restaurant, and he wrote the attorney general of the state seeking information.

In replying, Assistant Attorney General T. R. Gress said that the Georgia courts have never defined the word. The word is currently understood to mean "eating house," said Mr. Gress, but legally has no meaning at all.

Advance Forces Of Police Relief Circus on Scene

The staff of the big three-ring circus to perform at the Atlanta Police Relief association benefit at the auditorium June 23-28 reached Atlanta Saturday and began making plans for one of the largest circus events ever held here indoors.

United Daughters Who Served Veterans Officially Thanked

Appreciation of a dainty breakfast served to a large number of Confederate veterans who passed through Atlanta recently en route to the reunion in Memphis was expressed formally Saturday by Major General William A. Smith, of Ansonville, N. C., in a note received here by the Atlanta chapter, U. D. C. Major General Smith, commanding the North Carolina division, U. C. V., stopped his command here on Monday, June 2, when breakfast was served by the Atlanta U. D. C. chapter.

Mrs. John A. Perdue, president of the chapter, received the letter of appreciation. "Veterans enjoyed your gracious hospitality," he wrote, "and your welcoming smiles as well."

On the return trip from Memphis Major General and Mrs. Smith stopped off in Atlanta for a trip to Stone Mountain. They were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Bayard Clark, 831 Ponce de Leon avenue.

WOULD PAROLE SEVEN CONVICTED SLAYERS

Seven prisoners now serving life terms after conviction of murder were recommended for parole by the Georgia prison commission Saturday. Members of the commission stated, however, that seventy-five other petitions for clemency were turned down this month.

Those whose pleas for parole will go to Governor Walker for his decision next week, with the approval of the prison commission attached, were Jesper Bragman, of Telfair county, life term for murder of another negro; Jim Kelly Richmond county, life term for murder of his wife; Clarence Roberts, Troup county, life term for murder of M. F. Shinn; Walter Brown, Stewart county, life term for murder of Charlie Walton; Tom Wolf, Worth county, life term for murder of John Morrison; Will Thompson, Bibb county, life term for murder of Allen Reid, and J. G. Grant, Hall county, life term for murder of Wiley Heusney.

New York, June 14.—The census bureau report showing domestic mill consumption of only 413,649 bales for May, compared with 620,854 for the same month last year, an unexpectedly small figure, was followed by a flurry of selling today which sent the cotton market down to 28.68 for July and 25.75 for October, or 34 to 38 points net lower.

At these figures the market steadied on covering for over the week-end. Despite rallies, the close was easy at net declines of 15 to 18 points.

The market opened steady at declines of 2 to 10 points. High temperatures in the southwest may have inspired a little buying, but the demand was light and offerings increased on the bearish consumption figures. Another private report was published placing the mid-month condition of the crop at 66.8 against 67.6 toward the end of May, but had no apparent effect on the market, which was chiefly influenced by the statistics and prospects for cloudy weather with showers where temperatures have been normally high. July was relatively firm in the forenoon on trade buying, resumably to fix prices.

STEADY UNDERTONE AT NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans, June 14.—The cotton market today developed a steady undertone notwithstanding a bearish consumption report and generally favorable weather in the belt. The opening was higher with all active months establishing the highs of the day in the early trading with July 28.75, October at 25.44 and December at 25.18 or 12 to 16 points above the close of yesterday. July later traded 40 points down from the earlier high, but recovered the loss in the final trading. After the consumption report was made public, October and December dropped 46 to 47 points down from the opening highs but recovered moderately in the late trading. The close showed July unchanged for the day and new crop months 18 to 20 points net lower.

The feature of the day was the census bureau's report on consumption. The total was much smaller than expected and the decrease in stocks not as great as looked for.

SPOTS IN NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans, June 14.—Spot cotton quiet and unchanged. Sales on the spot, 21 bales; to arrive, none; low middling, 27.60; middling, 30.00; good middling, 31.12.

News, Views And Reviews

Stock Letters.

FENNER & BEANE.

New York, June 13.—During the past week about thirty railroad issues established new high records for 1924 and many standard industrials and public utilities in the investment class did likewise. The cheapness of money and the elimination of the possibility of hostile legislation against the carriers, together with renewed expectations of important mergers and consolidations have been the underlying influences back of these movements. The rank and file of industrial and oil companies will each have to be judged upon its own individual merits. Although the general market seems to have "turned the corner" we look for higher prices in the better grade of issues during the summer months.

LIVINGSTON & CO.

New York, June 14.—The rails continue in the best demand and will work much higher. The high-grade issues are still purchases. New York Central, Atchison, Norfolk & Western, Southern Pacific and Nickle Plate will sell higher while some of the lower priced issues, including Rhode Island, Texas Pacific and Wabash, will also go higher on dividend action and merger possibilities.

The steels and oils are behind the market but if this advance is to continue, these stocks will finally be affected. As soon as some leadership appears in the oil stocks, they should sell much higher.

Cotton Letters.

POST & FLAGG.

New York, June 14.—The market continues to show a very commendable resistance, though it should be said that pressure is by no means severe in spite of the bearish tenor of advices during the past few days. It looks as if sellers have concluded like buyers to wait on further developments and keep commitments small until a clearer view of later probabilities can be had. Trade advices indicate no large revival in the near future, but do indicate that as a result of curtailment production and consumption are now more nearly balanced, though there are still the past accumulations of goods to be distributed in part and until these have been further reduced buyers will feel that they can safely follow their hand-to-mouth policy.

FENNER & BEANE.

New Orleans, June 14.—It is well to remember that the census figures on supply include over 400,000 bales which it was unable to prove recently. Even with this inflation its figures show a loss of 550,000 bales since the end of April and stocks in warehouses and mills are given as 930,000 less than a year ago. Present stocks in mills and warehouses are given as 2,284,000. The market still acts oversold and we believe is a purchase on dips as long as the outlook is for a crop inadequate for world needs.

ORVIS BROS. & CO.

New York, June 14.—We think sales at this time are advisable for a temporary move and purchases should be confined to a break. Liverpool due Monday: July, 17.01; October, 15.20.

A. V. CURRAN & CO.

New Orleans, June 14.—H. & B. Beer says: The close of the week finds undertone of market very steady in the face of the continuance of favorable weather inland and smaller domestic consumption figures for the month of May. Apparently the impression prevails that while better weather has been experienced the past two weeks the condition of crop has not improved to any extent generally expected as rated by the mid-month private reports. The National Ginners' association has reported a deterioration of three points for half of the reporting period; the Watkins' bureau a decline of 1.8 points, and Giles' bureau issued today showing a loss in condition of .8 of one point. Locally and in New York the heat wave in the southwest is considered unfavorable for young cotton, but reliable advices from the country say hot, dry weather is favorable for growth, cultivation and cleaning of the fields of weeds and grass, while the high temperatures are serving to check activity of insects, particularly weevil.

HUBBARD BROS. & CO.

New York, June 14.—We doubt very much if the crop will be able to come up to the standard that it should be at this time of the year, but we feel it must do so in order to be sufficiently prepared to overcome the difficult months it has to pass through. Should the weather be favorable over the week-end, undoubtedly there will be some easiness in the market on Monday. On the other hand, should the weather be adverse, some advance can be expected as the market is entirely centered on the weather at the moment. Liverpool futures are due Monday: July, 17.09; October, 15.20.

Total bond sales (par value) $11,924,000.

New York, June 14.—Under the leadership of United States and foreign government issues, bonds today again shattered previous price records as the scramble for attractive investments continued unabated.

Treasury 4 1-4s, popularly known as the "Mellons," with an advance of almost a point, one of the widest on record in the government list, mounted to 105.18, approximately 3 points above the closing quotation of a week ago. All active Liberty bonds, with the exception of the 3 1-2s, also attained record high levels, with gains for the week ranging from one to two points.

With the crisis in French governmental affairs safely passed by the election of a new president, the way was opened for a vigorous rally in French bonds. The general belief that the establishment of a new government would facilitate operation of the Dawes plan also stimulated buying of other foreign obligations, enabling Belgian and Austrian issues to reach new 1924 top prices along with the French. Argentine 7s also sold at the highest level of the year.

Many railroad and public utility liens extended recent gains during the day's brief trading session, but with the list swept almost clean of the higher yielding mortgages, buying became more selective.

MONEY AT WORK

Brief But Important Lessons in Finance, Markets, Stocks, Bonds and Investments.

Ideal business partners are men who balance each other. They usually have different business qualifications without any characteristics that cause friction.

After a man gets a business started successfully the chances are that he will begin to look around for a partner. He himself is probably a good salesman and an optimist. However, he needs a balance if his business is to grow and become more profitable.

He does not need another salesman nor another optimist. At the same time if he gets the extreme opposite to his character, as for instance a short-sighted man inclined to be stingy in expenditures, there is sure to be friction, and further progress of the business will stop.

In this case, a conservative, far-sighted financier and buyer would just about complete the balance for a highly successful partnership.

In picking a partner therefore, it is wise to avoid a man with qualifications similar to your own. However, care must be taken to get a man who will balance the parnership and not act as a brake.

Low-Priced Rails Advance To New Levels on Saturday

DAY'S SUMMARY.

Friday	96.34	85.28

Total stock sales, 430,600 shares.

New York, June 14.—Profit-taking after six successive days of rising prices brought about some irregularity in today's brief session of the stock market, but it failed to halt the advance in several low-priced rails and a number of industrials and specialties reported to be under pool control. Bonds continued to show impressive strength with new high records for the year being recorded in all sections of the list.

Lackawanna was one of the outstanding strong spots in the rail group, climbing nearby 3 1-2 points to a new peak price for the year. Additonal new high records also were established by Rock Island 7 per cent preferred, Pere Marquette preferred, Western Pacific common and preferred, Great Northern preferred, Erie common and Chicago & Northwestern preferred, the gains in most instances being relatively small. Norfolk & Western dropped nearly two points to 123 1-4, and heaviness also was noted in Delaware & Hudson and Southern Pacific.

American Can led the so-called pivotal stocks by climbing more than a point to 109 1-8. United States Steel common advanced fractionally to 97, but Baldwin and Studebaker recorded slight recessions. U. S. Cast Iron Pipe, which has enjoyed a remarkable advance in the last few weeks, fell back more than a point on realizing.

Among the specialties, Woolworth continued to respond to reports of high current earnings, moving up five points to a record top at 99, or 16 points above the closing price last week. Kresge, another favorite chain store issue, added five points to its recent gain. Davison Chemical moved up more than a point to a half century mark. Other strong spots included Fisher Body, United Fruit and American Car and Foundry.

A 50-cent cut in Pennsylvania crude oil prices had a restraining effect on trading in the oil shares, but it failed to bring out any large volume of liquidation Atlantic Refining, which was under pressure recently, actually snapped back more than two points. Stiffening of the market for raw silk brought good buying into the silk shares, Mullinson standing out with a gain of 2 1-2 points.

Interest in the foreign exchange market was confined chiefly to French francs, which bounded up about 15 points to just above 5.04 cents. Demand sterling held steady around $4.31 3-4 and other rates showed little change.

$3,000,000 Bond Issue Sought by Power Co.

Money Needed for Completion of Hydro-Electric Projects in North Georgia.

Authorization for a $3,000,000 bond issue, the money to be used in completing several of the hydro-electric developments now under construction in northeast Georgia and to care for the financing of other projects in the same section, is sought in a petition filed Saturday by the Georgia Railway and Power company with the public service commission.

The bonds, general mortgage gold, are to be of par value, maturing in 30 years and will bear 6 per cent interest. Bonds are to be dated April 1, 1924, and will mature April 1, 1954. Security for the proposed issue will be provided by a like amount of bonds to be issued under the first mortgage of 1914, securing a total issue of bonds of $30,000,000. In the petition it is stipulated that the entire proceeds of the sale are to go to water-power development work.

In filing the bond petition officials of the Georgia Railway and Power company announced that work on its development projects is progressing rapidly. Pouring of concrete at the new Yonah dam began this week. This dam, located directly below the huge dam and power house at Tugalo, will form a lake stretching from the Yonah plant to the tail-race at Tugalo, and will add materially to the output of the company's developments.

Tunnel Near Completion.

The Terrora development, situated above Tallulah falls, and consisting of a mile-long tunnel drilled through the mountain of solid rock, and a new power plant at the head of Tallulah lake, will be completed by the first of the year, it was announced. After the work at Terrora is completed, the crews will switch their activities to the Nacoochee dam and power plant, which will be constructed between Burton and Terrora on the Tallulah river.

In the petition it is brought out that proceeds from the proposed new bond issue will cover a portion of the construction work for the latter part of 1924. It will form another step in the plan of financing the $18,000,000 development project launched January 1, 1923, to be completed by December 31, 1926, and which will increase the deliverable water-power output of the company 134 per cent, or expressed in kilowatt hours, from 272,000,000 per year to 635,000,000.

Since the work was started early in 1923 many of the projects outlined at that time have been rushed through to completion. Among these is the Tugalo development, where four units, each generating 220,000 horsepower of electrical energy, have been finished and are operating, adding 88,000 horsepower to the companys' output. Two other water-power jobs—Terrora and Yonah—are under way.

Plan Substations.

Substations at Toccoa, Commerce, Winder, Marietta, East Point and Cornelia are among other projects recently completed, in addition to several other enlargements and additions of service, including transmission lines from Tallulah to Tugalo, to Toccoa, to Commerce, to Winder, to Norcross, to Marietta and the Lindale-Summerville high tension line. Reconstruction and enlargement were effected at both Atlanta steam plants and the capacity of the Morgan Falls and Bull Sluice water-power plant was increased.

Work is also under way on transformer stations at Summerville, Lafayette, Chickamauga, Dalton, Roswell and Flowery Branch, together with construction of transmission and distribution lines, which will enable the company to serve communities not now on its list and to give more and improved service to cities and towns now being reached by the company's lines.

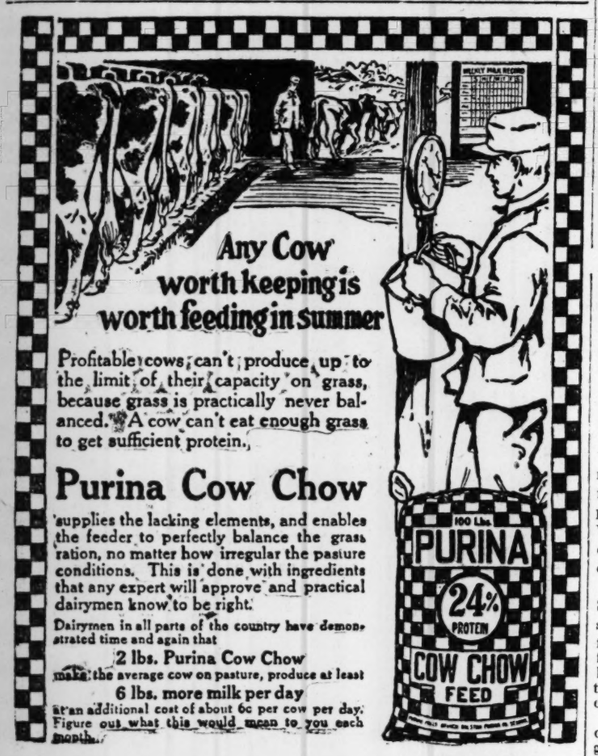

Complete development of the Tallulah and Tugalo rivers will be effected when the program now under way is finished. Development of these rivers to the full 1,200-foot fall means that the waters will be "worked" six times in the generation of power.

At the head of the river will be the Burton power plant, which will be constructed at Burton dam. Below this will be the Nacooche dam and power plant, while still lower is Lakemont lake. Then in order are the Tallulah power plant, the Tugalo dam and power house and the Yonah dam and power plant.

Profitable cows can't produce up to the limit of their capacity on grass, because grass is practically never balanced. A cow can't eat enough grass to get sufficient protein.

Purina Cow Chow

supplies the lacking elements, and enables the feeder to perfectly balance the grass ration, no matter how irregular the pasture conditions. This is done with ingredients that any expert will approve and practical dairymen know to be right.

Dairymen in all parts of the country have demonstrated time and again that

2 lbs. Purina Cow Chow makes the average cow on pasture, produce at least 6 lbs. more milk per day
at an additional cost of about 6c per cow per day. Figure out what this would mean to you each month.

Sims Announces Candidacy For Second Term as Mayor

Mayor Walter A. Sims, who says he needs a second term to put into effect his complete campaign program.

Mayor Walter A. Sims formally announced himself a candidate for re-election as mayor Saturday afternoon, declaring that his one term has not given him time to put into effect the full program he had outlined when he first took office.

"It is early in the season for a formal announcement," Mayor Sims said, "but I believe it is due to the many people who have urged me to run either for governor or for congressman to let them know definitely what my plans are so they can plan without me."

A full statement of his platform, he said, will be made "in due time."

The announcement follows:

"To the People of Atlanta:

"I hereby announce my candidacy for reelection as mayor of the city of Atlanta in the primary which is set for September 24, 1924.

"I am making this announcement after due deliberation for the reason that I have not had time to put into effect many of the policies and much of the program which I believe is essential to the progress and prosperity of Atlanta.

"It is too early to begin a campaign, the primary being about three months off, but in due time I shall announce a platform and shall give to the people a complete report of my stewardship.

"I shall continue to contend for those principles of economy and efficiency that are so vital to the interest of the people.

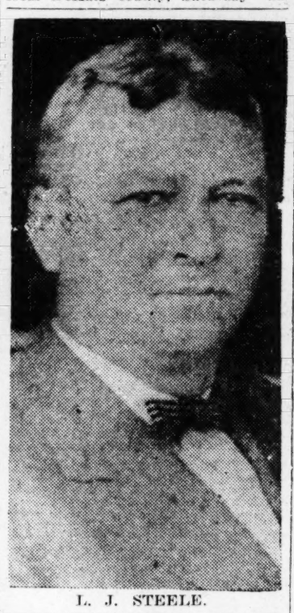

"There are many improvements that I want to see made that I have not had time to bring about.

"If reelected to the office of mayor of Atlanta I pledge my best efforts for what is best for Atlanta.

"WALTER A. SIMS."

STEELE WILL OPPOSE UPSHAW FOR CONGRESS

L. J. Steele, of Decatur, member of the Georgia house of representatives from DeKalb county, Saturday announced that he will be a candidate for congress from this district in the primaries this fall. Steele will oppose William D. Upshaw, present member of congress from the Fifth Georgia district.

L. J. STEELE.

In making his announcement, Mr. Steele stated that he made his decision only after consulting with many friends. He will be busy in court for the next few days, but as soon as he is released from the pressure of these duties he will begin an active campaign.

Mr. Eteele is a native of DeKalk county. He is 53 years of age and a graduate of Emory college. After graduating he first taught school, but later was admitted to the bar and began practice in December in 1899.

In 1903 he was elected county school commissioner, which position he held for nine years. He declined to offer for re-election to this ofice in 1912.

He was one of the charter members of the Decatur city school board, which was inaugurated in 1902. He was made secretary and treasurer of the board and was a member for 19 years continuously.

He has served as Decatur city attorney several times and in 1915 was elected mayor, serving as the city's chief executive for five years. It was also in 1915 that he was first elected to serve in the legislature, the present being his third term in that body. He is a recognized leader in the house and holds place on many important committees, including ways and means, amendments to the constitution, judiciary and education.

Judge Changes Court to Pulpit To Advise Girl

New York, June 14.—A general sessions court here was transformed into a pulpit when Wilma Woodward, a blonde, bob-haired actress, pleaded guilty to stealing $1,900 in clothing and cash from another actress, Betty Gray.

Wilma wept and Betty asked leniency, provided Wilma would go away from the big city and back to her home in Akron, Ohio.

So Judge Rosalsky picked up his Bible and read to Wilma from chapter VI of the book of Proverbs.

In the chapter the judge read was a verse urging "not to forsake the law of thy mother."

Wilma, it was said, had run away from home and mother six years ago to go on the stage.

"Bind them continually around thy heart," Rosalsky quoted, "and hang them about thy neck.

"When thou goest, it shall lead thee, and when thou sleepest, it shall teach thee, and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee."

Then the judge suspended sentence on Wilma and gave her to probation officers, who will arrange for her return home.

Treasury Offering Is Oversubscribed More Than 4 Times

Washington, June 14.—The treasury received offers for $609,192,500 on its last issue of certificates of indebtedness, which was announced as for about $150,000,000, with an interest rate of two and three-quarters per cent. Announcement of the total subscriptinos, made tonight by Secretary Mellon, said also that the treasury had accepted $193,065,000 of the offering.

While the rate on the new securities was the lowest since the issue of bonds over 15 years ago, almost $125,000,000 of those allotted were paid for by maturing certificates or by treasury three-year notes which mature Monday. Both of the maturnig issues bore much higher interest rates, but the easy money market, together with the fact that te certificates just issued are for only six months, accomplished what is regarded by the treasury as unusual success for the issue.

Allotment of the amount accepted on the new issue marked the second phase of the June operations, which include paying off more than $500,000,000 in maturing certificates and three-year notes, collection of the June 15 installment of income taxes, and payment by the British government of approximately $69,000,000 as an installment on its debt to the United States.

Wtih proceeds from the sale of certificates and the tax receipts, the treasury expects to run without further financing unitl September 15. At that time another installment of taxes is due, as is an issue of above $300,000,000 in certificates. Officials have announced that an issue of substantia size may be expected.

TORNADO AND HAIL DAMAGE COUNTIES

Charlotte, N. C., June 14.—Damage estimated at many thousands of dollars was done in Mecklenburg and Iredell counties this afternoon by a tornado and hailstorm that swept through a number of sections. A number of small houses were blown down, but so far as could be learned, no one was killed. The only known casualty was a negro woman who sustained a badly lacerated arm when her home, near Dixie, was destroyed.

The heaviest loss probably was sustained by farmers whose crops were ruined and by telegraph and telephone companies. Several miles of wire were blown down between Charlotte and Gastonia. The Charlotte-Gastonia highway was closed tonight because of timber lying across it.

Reports from Mooresville said considerable damage was done in the lower section of Iredell county, wires being blown down, houses unroofed and crops damaged. No loss of life was reported. Davidson also reported considerable damage.

FORD AUTO PLANTS CLOSE SATURDAY UNDER NEW SYSTEM

Detroit, June 14.—Offices of the Ford Motor company plants at Highland Park, River Rouge and Dearborn were closed today and will be closed every Saturday until further notice as a result of an order issued late yesterday. The order serves to put the three Ford plants on a five-day working basis, the factory employes having been on a five-day schedule for some time.

No Ford official was found who would substantiate the widely-circulated report that the Saturday holidays were to take the place of "vacations" for those entitled to vacations with pay and that the Saturday holidays would be continued for 12 weeks, each Saturday counting as a day on the two weeks vacation customarily allowed. Other reports were that if conditions remained unchanged at the end of the 12 weeks period, the five-day week would be continued, but pay would not be given for the Saturday off.

Heretofore Saturday has been a half-holiday at the Ford offices.

Twenty-five thousand department heads, clerks and other office employes are affected by the order.

Local Ford offices Saturday had received no advice from the Detroit headquarters that the plant here would be put on a five-day working basis as outlined above.

Finders of Grave Seek Relatives Of Yankee Bride

Every effort will be made by W. J. Nalley, prominent Atlanta civil engineer, to locate relatives of Prudence Bainbridge, whose skull was unearthed Friday by a steam shovel in excavations on Luckie street. In the meantime, he will keep the skull in his office.

The skull was furrowed from a shallow grave on Luckie street, near Cain, on the site of a new building. Investigation disclosed a bottle containing a paper on which the name, "Prudence Bainbridge" was written. The paper, buried in the bottle with the body for more than 50 years, was almost worn away and crumbled quickly when exposed to the light and air.

Old inhabitants say that Prudence Bainbridge was a New England bride who followed her trooper-husband with the armies of Sherman into Georgia, disguised as a soldier. When Sherman occupied Atlanta, she became desperately ill and was forced to remain behind when her husband advanced with Sherman to Savannah.

While he was away she died of a contagious disease and the house in which she was living on what is now known as Luckie street, was burned to the ground. Her body was buried in a shallow grave with no markings to identify it. Her husband, on his return to Atlanta, was unable to locate the grave although he searched for it for years. He died in 1903.

Mr. Nalley, who has taken special interest in the case, will do all in his power to locate the New England relatives of the unfortunate bride that her skull may be buried beside the body of her husband, he said. Mr. Nalley graduated from Georgia Tech in 1893, his name being the first called on the opening day of the school on October 1, 1888. He is now a consulting mechanical and civil engineer.

WEINBERG SETS NEW HIGH MARK FOR MACCABEES

Morris Weinberg, deputy state commander of Maccabees for Georgia, led the entire state in points scored last week in the intensive national drive for new members, according to information received at the Atlanta temple Saturday, from headquarters in Detroit, and stands fourth in the nation-wide list.

In winning out in Georgia Mr. Weinberg set a new high record for this state in the present drive, scoring a total of 94 points—the highest mark yet reached in the present campaign. Once before in this drive he established a record of 77 points.

Through organizing Palestine tent, No. 3, Mr. Weinberg becomes the first Maccabee in Georgia to win a trip to Washington in 1925 on the "caravan tour" to the international convention.

He served during the war in the marine corps and since leaving the service has been actively identified with fraternal work in Georgia. Palestine tent is ranked among the largets in Georgia and is actively cooperating with Mr. Weinberg in his work.

Since receiving his commission as a deputy state commander Mr. Weinberg has established an unusually successful record in Maccabee circles, culminating in the new high record during the past week. He is secretary of Palestine tent and is also taking a leading part in plans for the Victory class celebration to be held here July 1, when prominent state and city officials will participate in elaborate ceremonies.

Underslung Pipe Of General Dawes Now World Famous

Chicago, June 14.—The flat-bottom, long draught, black briar pipe made famous the world around by its principal exponent, Charles Gates Dawes, republican vice presidential nominee, is an institution of ten years standing in the Dawes family. An eccentric Scandinavian cigar maker of Chicago who conceived the idea of "absolutely dry smoke," a decade ago, brought one of the first working models of his conception to Mr. Dawes for experimental purposes.

"You smoke her for a year and tell me how she goes," said the donor.

The general agreed, was satisfied with the result, and in the language of the old-fashioned testimonial, has "never since been without it at home."

He buys pipes in dozen lots, and gives them to his friends when they get beyond the point of reclamation with an ordinary pipe cleaner.

Marshal Foch, who was recipient of one of the "castoffs" five years ago, recently wrote a letter of several hundred words to General Dawes telling of the continued faithful service of the "old water-proof furnace."

The pipe maker, making the most of his opportunities for trade, called at the Dawes bank the afternoon following his farming out of the first experimental model. Moving among the bank employes, he told of the president's acceptance of the first-run—and sold three dozen more on the bank floor.

"Always unscrew the cap at night—this is important—because if you don't the heat will swel lthe threads and you'll never get the cup out again," Dawes told Harry C. Butler, of Dallas, Texas, an old class mate, today.

Ten Reasons Why You Should Prefer—

CHEVROLET

for Economical Transportation

1 Chevrolet is modern in appearance. All models are of stream-line design, and fine, durable finish. Closed models have genuine Fisher Bodies.

2 Chevrolet is modern in construction. It has standard sliding gear transmission, Remy electrical equipment, modern cooling system, suction fuel feed with tank at rear, demountable rims, safe steering mechanism—in fact all essential engineering improvements found in the highest priced cars.

3 Chevrolet is fully equipped as sold. We quote prices on complete cars only. Chevrolet is all there, ready for use as soon as you put on your license plates. Compare the fully equipped Chevrolet with other cars, plus their missing equipment, and satisfy yourself which costs least.

4 Chevrolet transportation averages less cost per mile than that of any other car at any price. This cost includes the list price of car, insurance, operation, maintenance, annual depreciation and interest on your investment. Why pay more per mile for lower quality?

5 Chevrolet has the most powerful motor of any low priced car. Its supremacy for hill climbing and hard going is well known. Where there are most hills there are most Chevrolets. Why drive a slow car and hold up the line when it costs less to be a leader?

6 Chevrolet yields solid comfort in riding. This is due to its long wheel base, correct body suspension on extra strong and resilient vanadium steel springs, well-sprung and padded upholstery, deep seats with ample leg room, and correctly inclined backs. The double ventilating windshield and cool motor make driving a pleasure instead of a discomfort.

7 Chevrolet service costs are low because so few hours per year are needed in service stations. Chevrolets are built to stay together, and do not require you to be always near a service station. When adjustments or repairs are needed the Chevrolet Flat Rate System keeps the cost down to the minimum.

8 Chevrolet is a quality car. You are proud to tell of your ownership of a Chevrolet. Your Chevrolet tells the world that you appreciate modern quality and are a good judge of values.

9 Chevrolet is built for safety. It steers firmly and easily and the steering gear will not lock itself. It holds to the road even at high speed on gravel. Its braking power is ample. It is easy to handle and accelerates so quickly it enables you to get out of a bad position promptly. It is one of the few cars granted Class A rating by insurance underwriters.

10 Chevrolet is easy to buy and easy to trade. In buying a home, you always consider what you could get for it if you ever wanted to move. Be sure the car you buy has a good trade-in value, so that when the time arrives to get a new one, you can make a good deal. Chevrolet's trade-in value is high because of the big demand for this well-built, long-lived automobile.

DIXIE DATA BOOK RECEIVED ON ROW

Since its receipt on Motor row a few days ago, The Progressive Farmer's "Dixie Data Book," containing the January 1, 1924, registration of automobiles by makes and counties for each of the thirteen southern states, has caused much favorable comment.

Three years ago this great weekly farm paper of the south issued its first count of this kind and a hearty reception was accorded it in automotive circles, not only in the south, but throughout the country.

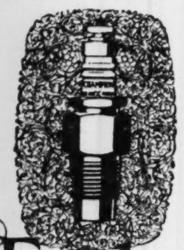

Each succeeding issue of the "Data Book" (a publication issued at frequent intervals by The Progressive Farmer to give facts and figures on the southern farm market) containing the registration figures has been eagerly awaited by the automotive trade and constant use made of the information contained therein.

In addition to giving the January 1, 1924, registration of cars by makes and counties, the count contains a summary of the registration of each make in each southern state and gives the increase or decrease of each make in each of these states during 1923.

The January 1, 1924, registration of motor trucks in the south, by states, is also given.

According to The Progressive Farmer's figures, there were on January 1, 1924, 2,288,471 automobiles in the thirteen southern states. This is a gain of 473,225 over the January 1, 1923, registration.

A copy of the "Dixie Data Book" Automobile Count may be obtained by communicating with the Birmingham, Ala., office of The Progressive Farmer.

AUTO MEN'S OUTING SET FOR WEDNESDAY

BY C. V. HOHENSTEIN.

The 1924 annual summer outing of the Atlanta Automobile association next Wednesday afternoon and evening at the Brookhaven Country club promises to be the most successful summer outing the association has ever staged. Reservations for tickets have been pouring into the executive secretary's office at a lively rate and the indications are that many of the members and their employees will bring their wives and lady frineds, and, in some instances, their children. Tickets for the men are $2 each, ladies and children $1.50 each. The executive secretary, C. V Hohenstein, 412 Gould building, states that all tickets must be purchased positively not later than noon Tuesday, as reservations cannot be made after that time.

The principal entertainment will be in the afternoon and evening. In the afternoon Wylie West, general chairman on arrangements, has scheduled a number of contests for those who do not participate in the golf tournament. Races and games will be put on and prizes awarded to the winners. The members of the association have already donated a large number of very beautiful prizes for this particular part of the program. The lake will be open for bathing and quite a number are expected to take advantage of this privilege.

At 7 o'clock in the evening in the banquet hall of the club house an elaborate dinner will be spread for the guests, during which a special entertainment will be put on by Fat Elrod, chairman of the entertainment committee. This will be followed by the awarding of prizes and the entire function will wind up with a dance, which will probably not be completed until 10:30 or 11 p. m.

For those who play golf an individual golf match is being arranged for the morning and a beautiful silver trophy will be awarded the winner of this match. In the afternoon the team match will be staged. Many of the members have already entered teams and a beautiful tropny, in addition to several gold medals, will be awarded to the winners in this match. Clarence Knowles, of the Martin-Nash Motor company, telephone Ivy 3950, is in charge of the golf tournament and wants everyone who intends entering either the individual or team match to phone him immediately so that the events can be made up not later than Tuesday.

This will be the final general membership meeting of the association for the summer. There will be no meetings in July or August on account of the hot spell.

SPANISH-AMERICAN VETERANS TO HOLD MEETING JULY 3-4

The first day will be devoted to business matters and the second will be given over entirely to entertainment and celebration features. There will be many prominent speakers.

Olin K. Fletcher is commander of the Georgia chapter.

NEGRO BURGLARS ABANDON STOLEN GOODS AND FLEE

Four unidentified negroes abandoned their contemplated robbery of the Drennan & Zahn Auto Supply company, at 449 Marietta street, Saturday morning and fled when C. A. LANDAU, NEW CADILLAC BODY STYLE, OFFERED

Pursuant to its policy of offering specific body styles for every purpose, the Cadillac Motor Car company has just announced the addition of the fourteenth model to its V-63 line. The new addition is a five-passenger landau, a striking design created especially for those who desire a closed body of marked individuality.

The finish of the new body, a distinctive "magic green" trimmed with a French gray belt line stripe, together with the natural wood finish of the wheels presents a most attractive color combination. It also contrasts smartly with the nickel-plating of radiator, head lamps, side lamps and hub caps. The designer has included a rear quarter ornamented with English coach bows and oval windows set at a pleasing angle, the ensemble giving the new car all the earmarks of a custom-built creation. The rear window is of liberal size and all windows and doors in the tonneau are equipped with silk roller shades. The upholstery is mohair velvet and harmonizes in color with the exterior finish.

CANDLER NAMED TO DIRECTORATE OF CORPORATION

Formation of the Bowman-Biltmore Hotels corporation, a $27,000,000 enterprise, which comprises practically all of the great Bowman hotels throughout America, was disclosed Saturday by William Candler following his return from New York city.

Although the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, of which Mr. Candler is vice president and treasurer, is not included in the big merger, he has been elected to the directorate of the corporation and it was to attend the first meeting of the board of directors that he went to New York city.

DETROIT EQUIPS 'COP' CARS WITH RADIO SETS

Radio is now beginning to loom up as a real foe of the criminal. In many cities radio-equipped police departments, according to Mr. Cone, of the local Exide Service station, are either being considered or have already been established.

In Detroit three big Lincoln touring cars have recently been equipped with radio receiving sets, which will enable these highpowered and speedy cars to maintain constant communication anywhere and at all times with police headquarters. It is planned eventually to have seven of these cars in service.

In Philadelphia plans are under way for the installation of similar radio equipment, which will be used in conjunction with the searchlight system inaugurated by the famous General Butler.

Upon the speed with which the description of the criminal can be placed in the hands of every policeman after the crime has been committee depends, largely, the probability of capture. This has time and again been demonstrated when men and women without previous criminal experience and record have committed crimes and in spite of their lack of experience have actually managed to escape. Had the police been warned in time, the awkward efforts of these criminals would have quickly caused them to fall into the police net. This also applies to the class of criminals "known to the police."

The usual method, which has been in use for many years and which undoubtedly will continue to be used in addition to the radio method, is that of telephoning descriptions and other information in to police headquarters. From there it is telephoned simultaneously to every police district in the city. Then as fast as the policeman on the beat "pulls in" or reports over the telephone he is given that description. In the case of stolen articles, slips are made out and distributed to pawnshops and junk dealers, who are warned to keep on the look out for persons who might try to dispose of their loot at these places.

Naturally, there is more or less delay in this system which it is hoped will be eliminated to a great extent by means of radio-equipped bandit-chasing cars and other receiving points.

The new radio-equipped cars will be especially valuable in bandit-catching work. These cars patrolling various parts of the city can be notified instantly of hold-ups and immediately sent in pursuit. Incidentally, the Detroit cars can travel over 80 miles an hour, the speedometer of the fastest actually showing on tests 84 miles an hour. These cars are equipped with windshields 7-8 of an inch thick, made of bullet-proof glass. Two gun racks are provided, one on the heelboard of the front seat and one, covered, on the heelboard of the rear seat, each to carry a sawed-off shotgun.

The radio set is a five-tube neutrodyne using hard tubes throughout, with a loud speaker hung from the rear top brace of the car. The aerial is concealed in the top, the frame of the car acting as a counterpoise. Especially interesting is the battery equipment, which is composed of a 6-volt Exide battery and an Exide B battery of 96 volts, assembled in special trays. The Exide A or 6-volt battery is of the same type as the starting, lighting and ignition battery on this car, so that the two are interchangeable in case of emergency. The starting battery, which is also an Exide, is concealed in the left-hand dust shield, while the radio A battery is held in a special compartment below the receiving set. The B battery equipment is under the front seat.

Both the A and B batteries will be charged every five days. Two complete sets have been furnished to each car, so that the car will not be out of service while the batteries are being charged. Superintendent Potts, of the signal department, Detroit police headquarters, states that the cars will be in service 24 hours a day and will constantly be in touch with headquarters station KOP, which broadcasts on a wave length of 286 meters.

Superintendent Potts believes that the advent of radio in police work will undoubtedly make it increasingly difficult for the criminal to escape the clutches of the law.

BUILDER CONVENTION TO DRAW BIG CROWD

Atlanta was selected as the 1925 convention city of the Southern Builders' Supply association at its meeting in Nashville last week. The builders' association has a membership of 250 of the leading builders' supply dealers in the south, and in addition, large manufacturers of builders' supplies always have their representatives at the annual conventions. It is estimated by the Atlanta Convention bureau that some 200 manufacturers and dealers will attend the convention here.

The southern association was organized in Atlanta five years ago by Victor H. Kreigshaber, prominent Atlanta dealer, and its meeting next year will be a home-coming. The Biltmore hotel has been selected as convention headquarters.

Mrs. Wombat, losing some sequins from her party gown, gathered them up and put them in a pill box until she could find time to sew them on again. Mr. Wombat, rummaging in the medicine closet for something for his cold, found them and took two of them. He said nothing and the next morning his cold was much better.—Louisville Courier.

KLANSMAN ACQUITTED ON CHARGE OF MURDER

Ebensburgh, Penn., June 14.—Samuel Evans, alleged member of the Ku Klux Klan, tried on a murder indictment which grew out of a fight between klansmen and the townspeople of Lilly on April 5, was acquitted by a jury here tonight. The jury deliberated for one hour and 20 minutes.

Evans was the first of 18 alleged klansmen and 13 Lily residents to be tried in connection with the killing of three Lilly men during the fight.

In addition to murder and manslaughter charges, the defendants who are said to be members of the klan are charged with carrying concealed weapons.

Undecided On Course.

District Attorney Weimer, the prosecutor, after hearing the verdict in the Evans case, was undecided as to his next step, as he called a conference of his associates to decide on a course of action in the other cases.

The 31 defendants now under indictment were found guilty of affray and unlawful assemblage several days ago.

The indictment against Evans named Frank Miasco as the victim of the right. The state introduced testimony to show that the trouble started after the klan held a demonstration on a nearby hillside, and when the robed men marched through the village to a special train. Near the railroad station, witnesses testified, Miasco turned a stream of water on the klansmen. A number of prosecution witnesses said a command "halt—open fire," came from the ranks of the klansmen, while others said the first shots were fired from "behind Miasco."

Charge of Judge.

Judge T. P. Finletter, in his charge, said the evidence was contradictory. Several witnesses, he added, testified that Evans had protected himself from the water. If that was true, the court said, Evans should be acquitted, but if, as other evidence tended to show, Evans with others was inn commission of unlawful assembly, then he and the other defendants under indictment were responsible for all the acts that proceeded therefrom.

MILTON NOBLES, FAMOUS ACTOR, DIES SUDDENLY

New York, June 14.—Milton Nobles, 80 years old, playwright and character actor, who for the last two years had been playing the late Frank Bacon's role in "Lightin'," died at his home in Brooklyn today.

Nobles began his stage career in 1867, playing in the picturesque western stock companies of that day. In 1875 he starred in his own dramatization of "Jim Bludsoe" in Wood's Museum, Philadelphia. He was the author of numerous melodramas, among them "The Phoenix" in which he played for 25 years.

The now famous line "And the villain still pursued her," is said to have originated in this play.

In addition to his engagements in the "legitimate," Nobles and his wife, Dollie, played for many years on the vaudeville circuits. Just last week he appeared in a benefit revival of "She Stoops to Conquer" at the Empire theater, a comedy in which he had played 52 years ago.

The Man Who Goes After Opportunity—

Knows the alphabet well enough to know that "B" comes after "A" and that "C" comes after "B." And as soon as he learned to count he found that 2 comes after 1.

He doesn't brag much about his knowledge because he knows that everybody knows these things. But—he does put this knowledge to practical use.

He goes after opportunity via The Constitution A-B-C Classified Columns—where all the profitable offers are arranged for quick finding in A-B-C and 1-2-3 order.

This wouldn't be a quick finding system if he didn't know that "B" comes after "A," and 2 after 1—but he does know it!

And the classified section would not be a complete catalogue of opportunity if it were not filled with all the best offers of the city—but it is filled with them!

You, too, should go after opportunity via the A-B-C Classified Columns!

CAR SERVICE

Is Now Being Extended to

MORNINGSIDE

THE county is now taking the old surface off Highland avenue and along with this activity the power company proposes to install gas mains and tracks for their street railway for a distance of 4,000 feet. Cars will operate on a 10-minute schedule.

CAN you visualize? Transportation and gas are the two factors primarily necessary for the building of new and desirable sections. Next in importance is the roadbed. In Morningside and North Highlands, we have installed absolutely every modern convenience for you. Morningside Park will be served by passenger buses running on a 10-minute schedule—North Highlands by street cars on a 10-minute schedule—thus the purchaser is assured of transportation for all time.

YOU can buy a beautiful, heavily wooded, fully improved lot in North Highlands for $2,500—these lots carry a $6,000 building restriction, thus assuring your property of a steady appreciation for years to come as this section continues to grow.

MORNINGSIDE PARK has $10,000 building restrictions on Morningside Drive (Quality Street), where desirable lots may be had for $2,750 to $4,000; Sherwood Road lots from $2,250 to $2,750, building restrictions $7,500; Cumberland Road and Cumberland Circle, lots from $1,750 to $2,500, building restrictions $6,000.

ALL improvements are either down or guaranteed in writing when you buy. Taxes for the year are paid by the present owner—the purchaser is not assessed one single penny for improvements.

WHY not come out into this truly delightful neighborhood and buy your lots now? You can easily be in your own home by September 1st.

DRIVE out today to Morningside—Morningside Drive to Highland avenue—it seems that all Atlanta is coming to Morningside—count the new homes now under construction. Compare our street improvements with any in the city.

WHEN you are ready to make your selection, phone WAlnut 0636.

JACK WENZLER COPS SOUTHERN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Wins Over Nelson Giddens Three Up and Two to Play; Adair Cup Goes to Memphis

BY GEORGE CONGDON,
Sporting Editor, The Constitution.

Louisville, Ky., June 14.—The golf that beat Perry Adair, of Atlanta, defending chapion; Dan Jarvis, the Nashville flash; Louis Tachau, Louisville veteran, and Frank Dyer, of Memphis, former metropolitan amateur champion, this afternoon set Jack Wenzler, of Memphis, on top of the southern golf championship heap for 1924.

Wenzler takes the magnificent George W. Adair cup away from Atlanta for the first time. His name is the third to be engraved on it, the others being Bob Jones, who won it in 1922, and Perry Adair, who won it in 1923.

Wenzler won the 1924 championship by defeating Nelson Giddens, also of Memphis, in 36 holes of the steadiest golf produced by the 1924 renewal tournament. He beat Giddens three up on the 34th hole, but they played out the other two holes. On the 35th Wenzler showed himself to be a real champion by making an eagle three. The eagle was made possible by his second shot, an iron, that carried the ball 175 yards and set it down exactly two feet to the right of the pin.

All through the 36 holes with Giddens, Wenzler played championship golf. Giddens made strong bids for a comeback several times, but when Giddens was off on his tee shots, the worst part of his game, Wenzler kept on playing his steady championship golf that won him the southern title and sent the beautiful cup to the Colonial Country club, of Memphis.

Shots Are Features.

Wenzler's tee shots and putting were the features of the match. Time after time the champion sank 10, 15 and 20-foot putts for wins or halves. It was just such performance that gave him his first eagle of the day on the 25th hole, when he made a three on a par five hole.

Wenzler finished the first 18 holes two up on Giddens. Wenzler's game was even better on the second 18, and he made the round in 71, par. Wenzler's morning round was a 77, making his total for the day 148. Giddens also made a 77 on the morning round, but his 78 on the afternoon 18 brought his total up to 155.

While Wenzler won the championship, the victory of Giddens in going to the position of runner-up was the more spectacular win. Wenzler has been playing golf for something like eight or nine years and spends much of his time on the course. With this fact in mind, consider the history of Giddens, who is an assembler in an automobile plant in Memphis with little time for practice, and who has been playing the game less than two years. The fact that his opponent was a comparative veteran in the game did nothing to break Giddens' nerve. He was out to win and it was only because he was up against a natural championship golfer that he didn't.

In addition to winning the George W. Adair cup for his club, Wenzler won a 30-inch cup that is to remain permanently in his possession. Smaller, but no less magnificent, is the trophy that was awarded Giddens.

Hickey Gets Award.

The only Atlantan to figure in the trophy awards was Richard Hickey, who was runner-up in the second flight after being defeated today in a 36-hole match by Louis Montedonico, Memphis, ten up and nine to play. They finished the first 18 with Montedonico 11 up. The lead was too great for Hickey to overcome. Montedonico won this advantage fairly with a 70, one under par, on the first eighteen.

Hickey was on his game and made around 78, but again it was a case of comparative newcomer to the game being matched with a veteran.

The winners and runners-up in all of the other flights received trophies also. The results of these matches were as follows:

Third flight—Glen Crisman, Selma, Ala., defeated Tommy Aycock, Jacksonville, Fla., five up and four to play.

Fourth flight—R. T. Wilson, Jr., Jacksonville, Fla., defeated Jimmy Hillhouse, of Birmingham, Alabama state champion, one up in 19 holes.

Fifth Flight—B. E. Hardacre, Jacksonville, Fla., defeated C. Krayenbuhl, Louisville, four up and two to play.

Sixth Flight—R. E. Augustus, Louisville, defeated William Wolfe, Louisville, five up and four to play.

The third flight final match was 36 holes, while the fourth, fifth and sixth flight finals were 18 holes only.

The trophies and low medal, which went to Giddens, who won the playoff of a tie in the qualifying round, were awarded at the eighteenth green late this afternoon, with a huge crowd watching from the walk and the wide veranda of the Louisville Country club clubhouse.

Champ Hs Stiff Fight.

In winning his way to the championship of the south, Wenzler had a stiff fight in every match. His first opponent was the defending champion, whom he eliminated in a two-up victory on the eighteenth green. Jarvis, the next man he met, was favored to be champion or runner-up, but he was defeated by Wenzler, three down and two to play. Louis Tachau, the Louisville man who has been a strong contender in southern tournaments for two or three years, was another competent man. Wenzler went to the entire 18 holes to defeat Tachau two up. Wenzler's hardest fight, including even the championship affair of today, was that yesterday in which he defeated Dyer, former Metropolitan amateur champion and former New Jersey state champion, one up on the eighteenth green.

A gallery of 400 people followed the Wenzler-Giddens match today, but it was much better controlled than the smaller gallery that several times interfered with the Dyer-Wenzler match and the Giddens-Chastaine Harris affair yesterday.

Giddens in going into the finals also met players who were among the favorites when the qualifying round was finished. He took his first match by default of M. J. Condon, Memphis, but his second he won from G. W. (Tubby) Palmer, of Miami, Fla., two up. John Bachman, the Rome, Ga., marvel who shot a 68, three under par, Thursday, he defeated yesterday seven up and five to play. Giddens' hardest match, however, outside of the final affair today, was his 18-hole struggle against Chastaine Harris, also of Memph' one up.

Giddens Plays Well.

Giddens played a pretty game today except for his tee shots, which included four out of bound slices. These slices may have cost him the match, for every one came when he needed good, long drives, and he lost every hole where he had an out of bound slice.

Wenzler had the honor from the first tee, but the drives were equal. Wenzler dubbed his brassie second and Giddens went onto the green with a midiron. Giddens' chip was short and the missed an eight-foot putt. Wenzler was on the green in three and they halved in five.

Giddens had the worst of the drives from the second, being to the left and in the rough. He chipped into a trap. Wenzler laid his first six feet from the cup. Giddens was out in three and holed out in four. Wenzler sank a par three. Wenzler one up.

Giddens drove out of bounds from the third tee, while Wenzler went straight down the fairway. Both approaches were short. Giddens rolled eight feet from the cup and Wenzler overran twelve feet. His try for a four was a bit weak. Giddens punched his putt to the left and Wenzler sank a short one to take the hole. Wenzler two up.

Wenzler cleared his mashie shot on the short fourth, while Giddens went on the green fifteen feet from the tin. Giddens' try for a birdie two rimmed the cup and bounced away. Wenzler missed a ten-footer, conceding the hole. Wenzler one up.

Good Drives on Fifth.

Both drives on the fifth averaged 300 yards. Giddens' chip was short, while Wenzler reached the green. Giddens rolled 18 inches from the cup. Wenzler's putt went wide and they halved in four.

Long drives marked the sixth with Giddens inside. His approach was a high backspin, which stopped dead four feet from the cup. Wenzler overran his approach and missed his third. Giddens leveled the match by running down his putt. All square.

Giddens half-topped his drive from the seventh but recovered beautifully with a 200-yard brassie shot. Wenzler drove well and his second was hole high to the right of the green. Giddens' approach overran 20 feet. Wenzler chipped seven feet from the cup and Giddens was inches short with his fourth. Wenzler missed his fourth also and they halved in five. All square.

Both drives carried the eighth, Wenzler being slightly away. Giddens laid his second dead to the pin. Wenzler overran and was short with his third, laying Giddens a three-quarters stymie. Giddens failed to putt around and they halved in four. All square.

Giddens sliced out of bounds driving from the ninth and Wenzler was hole high to the left of the green. Giddens' second tee shot lay quite near Wenzler's drive. Wenzler rolled his gently within six feet of the cup. Giddens laid himself a quarter stymie, hitting Wenzler's ball, but lost the hole when Wenzler sank his third. Wenzler one up.

The card for the nine holes:

Wenzler .....535 545 543—39
Giddens .....546 343 544—38

Hooks Drive.

Giddens began with a hooked drive into the rut. He played a long out and narrowly missed a yawning bunker. Wenzler looked up, playing an easy mashie after a nice drive and the result was a miserable top. His third shot reached the green but overran the cup. Giddens tipped to within four feet. Wenzler missed his putt and the match again became all square.

A sliced drive from the 11th tee by Giddens found a trap at the right of the green. Wenzler almost drove the green and laid up for a three. Giddens' chip was too strong and he missed a try for a three by a scant two inches. Wenzler sank his easy putt, taking the hole. Wenzler one up.

Attempting to slice around the dog-legged 12th, Giddens drove out of bounds. Wenzler was short of the green by a few yards. Giddens' second drive was eight yards short. Wenzler overran his approach. Giddens did likewise and failed to sink a ten-footer. Wenzler also missed a short one but sank a four against Giddens' five. Wenzler two up.

Wenzler had the best of the drive from the 13th tee. Giddens went into the rough and it cost him one stroke as he chopped out. Wenzler was on in two and lagged up to win with a birdie four. Wenzler three up.

Jinx on Trail.

A jinx grabbed both players on the 14th. Wenzler driving into a shallow sand-trap and Giddens slicing into the rough. Giddens failed to get out of trouble with his second but chipped in fifteen feet with the third. Wenzler carried to the green with the second out of the trap but overshot the third. He also missed his putt. Giddens was two short and they halved in five. Wenzler three up.

Both drove to the green on the 15th. Wenzler getting slightly closer. Giddens missed his putt for a two. Wenzler also blew his second and they halved in three. Wenzler two up.

Giddens made a game effort on the last three holes to even the match, but a pernicious flight that has afflicted practically all of his drives in the finals, refused to leave him and Wenzler, playing steady, consistent golf, clung grimly to the two-hole advantage as they went in for lunch.

It is anybody's match although Wenzler still continues to be the gallery's favorite.

Giddens had a wonderful opportunity to cut down Wenzler's lead on the 18th green. His try for a five-foot putt and a par four hung on the edge of the cup.

The cards:

Wenzler, in ...534 453 555—39—77
Giddens, in. ...455 553 355—39—78

Giddens in Trouble.

Giddens hooked into a grove of tress driving from the 19th, but he was well out with a high mashie. Wenzler hit a long drive but half-topped his spoon second. They lay alike in two. Both approached the edge of the green. Wenzler's putt was

Baltimore Wins Hotchkiss Cup

Norfolk, Va., June 14.—The Baltimore tennis team this afternoon, by eliminating the Washington tennis team, captured Hotchkiss cup for the fourth time in succession, taking five out of the nine matches. The closing series of matches were declared as closely fought as any ever staged on a local court.

In the preliminary matches this morning Baltimore eliminated the Richmond team, while Washington put the Norfolk team out of the running. The Baltimore-Washington matches, six singles and three doubles, were played in the afternoon. The courts were heavy, due to early morning showers.

Selected on Olympic Team

HOMER WELCHEL.

When the American Olympic athletes sail for Europe next Monday, one from Georgia Tech will be among the outfit. Homer Welchel qualified in the javelin throw. He was third in the finals held Saturday in Boston. Priester, of Mississippi Aggies, was second, while W. T. Healy, an Atlanta boy, was fourth in the event.

Atlanta Athletes Named On U. S. Olympic Team Which Sails on Monday

Boston, Mass., June 14.—Three athletes from the far south qualified as members of the American Olympic team which sails Monday for Europe. They are: Homer Welchel, Georgia Tech; Preister, of Mississipp A. and M.; W. T. Healy, of Andover, and whose home is in Atlanta. All of this trio qualified in the javelin throw.

Preister finished second, Welchel third and Healy fourth in the finals.

Harvard Stadium, Cambridge, Mass., June 14.—America's athletes showed track and field ability of a caliber well calculated to win the Olympic games for this country, when records fell in hotly contested events in the final try-outs here Saturday.

The "comeback" of Jackson V. Scholtz, who raced to victory in the 200 meters in record time after he had smashed the world's best mark for this distance in a semi-final heat, was the feature of a day crammed with thrills, close finishes, and lots and lots of rain.

Despite the rain which soaked field and track within the encircling horseshoe, three records cracked and fell. Besides Scholtz's running in the 200 meters, there was the record-breaking victory of G. Taylor, of Grinnell, who stepped the 400-meter hurdles in 52.6, and that of J. Coard Taylor, of Illinois A. C., who set a world mark in the 400-meter run.

The big surprise of the meet was the glorious running of Chet Bowman, who captured the 100-meter dash from Scholtz, Paddock and Frank Hussey in record time. The Syracuse star's orange jersey showed in front at the 50-yard mark, where he drew away stride by stride from Jackson Scholtz, who was running second. Bowman hurled himself across the finish line winner by two yards, and Paddock was abreast of Scholtz at the tape.

Paddock's Showing Is Poor.

The big disappointment, to his admirers at least, was the poor showing of Charley Paddock. The California flash was beaten consistently, although he did step the 200 meters in record time on Friday. Charley developed a sore leg after being beaten in the 100 meters, and Coach Robertson tried to persuade him not to start in the finals of the furlong, for which he had qualified. Paddock ran, however, and finished absolutely last.

Capping the climax of a day of great racing, during which it rained all the time, drenching the 25,000 spectators, who stuck it out to see the finals, came the final victory of Scholtz in the 200 meters. The New York A. C. sprinter had already smashed the world's record in winning his semi-final heat, but he was running in such wonderful form that no one knew but what he mght again lower the phenomenal mark of 20.9. The starter's gun for the final event sent the runners out of the chute well bunched, but at the 100 meters it was seen that Scholtz, running like a machine, had the race well in hand.

Fifty yards from the tape, a gap began to show between the flying leader and the field, and as he hit the tape Scholz was going away from the bunch. Bayes Norton, of Yale surprised by taking second place from George Hill, Red and Blue star.

Joie Ray, the chesty little champion from the Illinois A. C., withdrew from the 1,500-meter run and this event was won handily by his teammate, Ray Buker, who equalled the American record of 3 minutes 55.8 seconds. Lloyd Hahn, of the B. A. A., was seven yards behind Buker, and W. O. Spencer, who led the field until the Illinois man made his bid in the final lap, was third.

Ray showed his class in the 3,000-meter run, winning as he pleased in 8 minutes, 43.9 seconds. Ed Kirby, of Cornell, was second, and Larry Larrivee, of Holy Cross, who ran a great race and passed Ray in the final lap, only to yield to the Chicago runner in the final sprint for the tape, finished third.

Johnny Romig, of Penn State, walked away with the 5,000-meter run, jumping into the lead at the fourth lap and holding it to the finish. The race for second place was a hot one, with H. Rvm Phelps, of Iowa, racing Rilus Doolittle, of Butler college, into submission. The winner's time was slow, 15 minutes, 15.7 seconds.

Booth Wins for Johns Hopkins.

The 10,000-meter run went to Verne Booth, of Johns Hopkins, the intercollegiate champion, also in slow time. The rangy collegian was given a hard race by little Johnny Gray, sandy-haired Philadelphia boy, who submitted only in the stretch and who took second place from August Fager, of New York, the third man. Booth's time was 32:14.6.

The hurdles produced some of the best competition of the day, Karl Anderson, who won his semi-final heat in record time, being shut out in the finals of the 110-meter hurdle race. This was won by H. Guthrie, Ohio State, with D. Kinsey, Illinois, second, and F. P. Johnson, Illinois, third.

The field performances did not produce any broken records, but they gave a good line on our team's ability and chances against the athletes of the world at Paris.

The performance of the pole vaulters, four of whom cleared 13 feet and tied for first place, was remarkably good and will give the best of Europe something to think about. It is doubtful, now that Hoff, the great Scandinavian vaulter, is out with a lame ankle, if any other country can place a man better than fifth in this event.

Showing of the big boys in the hammer throw was rather disappointing, and the United States will probably good and will give the best of javelin throw on the strength of today's trials.

But in the shot-put, where a contestant with 47 feet 3 inches as his best failed to qualify, the United States looks to be supreme. It was the giants from the far coast. Houser and Hartranft, who showed the way in this event.

The performances in the high jump were a long way from the record, but the leaping of the negro star, Dehart Hubbard, who did better than 25 feet in the broad jump, makes him look a likely winner at Paris.

YALE CREW TO COMPETE IN OLYMPICS

Philadelphia, June 14.—Blue-tipped blades of Yale's powerful eightoared shell swept down the Schuylkill tonight a half-length ahead of the navy officers in the Olympic rowing final, and gave Coach Ed Leader's pupils the right to represent the United States on the Seine next month.

Yale covered the mile and a quarter in five minues and 51 seconds, which was claimed as a new world's record.

Pulling desperately in third place came navy varsity, about a length back of the officers, several of whom sat in the navy shell at Antwerp Olympics four years ago. Penn's junior varsity finished fourth and New York A. C., an added starter, by virtue of winning its protest of being washed by the referee's boat in yesterday's trial, was a poor fifth.

So close was the finish between Yale and the navy officers that the officials timers had but 1 1-5 seconds between them.

Phillies Furnishes Winner.

Philadelphia furnished the winner in the Olympic single sculls when W. E. Garrett Gilmore, of the Bachelors' Barge club, broke the course record in beating Paul V. Costello, Penn A. C., by three lengths with Russell Codman, of the Union Boat club of Boston, but a half-length back of Costello and Edward McDuff, Buffalo's policeman-sculler, last.

Walter M. Hoover, Duluth Boat club, former national and diamond sculls champion, was entered but did not start. He told friends he had failed to reach his best physical condition.

Gilmore rowed a remarkable race and covered the mile and a quarter in six minutes 53 seconds, the old record for the course being 7:05 2-5, which Costello set two years ago.

Of the five crews that will represent the United States in France, Yale is the only college. Philadelphia produced the other four winners with Gilmore in singles today, and Bachelors' Barge club in four-oared shells. Penn Athletic club in doubles, and Pennsylvania Barge club in pair-oared shells in Friday's races.

ZEV IS BADLY DEFEATED IN RACE

Aqueduct Race Track, Long Island, N. Y., June 14.—For the third time this season Zev, the greatest of all American three-year-olds in 1923, and one of the greatest money-winners in the history of the turf, was beaten Saturday and beaten badly. Zev finished outside the money in the $10,000 Brooklyn handicap, one of the old eastern races. Hephaistos won and an outsider named Sunsini, owned by the Lilane stables, was second. Dunlin finished third, but was disqualified and Enchantment, the fourth horse, received the show money.

Not only Zev, but Mad Hatter, a stablemate of Zev and a great handicap horse, was beaten also, and the colors of Harry Sinclair, who owns them, dangled dejectedly, while those of F. E. Brown, who owns Hephaistos, were run up the stick.

Rialto took the lead at the start with Zev pursuing and Enchanment following Zev. Aga Khan came along from the pack at the half-mile pole to make the pace until the mile had been covered. Zev, Enchantment and Rialto then began to press Aga Khan but Rialto was the only one to maintain the pace as they came into the stretch. Dunlin and Hephaistos now began to move up in the drive for the wire and they raced along so close that a bath towel would have covered them until Johnny Maiben, on Hephaistos, shook the last dash out of his horse's system and swung home a winner by a length. Sunsini won second place by an unusually game dash at the finish.

Washington Crew Favored in Race

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 14.—Five of the six college crews here in training for the intercollegiate regatta on June 17 went over the course this afternoon against time. Watches on shore caught the Washington varsity for the best time, the Huskies doing the three miles in 14:18. Pennsylvania was caught for the second best time at 14:24. The Quakers, as they reached the two and one half mile mark, were caught in a sudden storm and the final half mile was rowed in blinding rain and a stiff wind.

Syracuse went over the course in 14:27. Wisconsin, rowing later in the day after the tide had commenced to change, was clocked in 16:20. Cornell went over the course but the time could not be obtained. Columbia did not attempt a trial. Washington staged her trial in the best part of the afternoon, when tide and a slight breeze favored them.

Carlyle Traded For Dan McGrew

Washington, June 14.—Roy Carlyle, outfielder of the Memphis Southern Association club, has been obtained by the Washington Americans for delivery in the fall in exchange for Pitcher Walter McGrew, it was announced today. The latter will depart for his new berth immediately, becoming the outright property of Memphis.

Benny Karr and McLaughlin Are Unable To Halt Sluggers Of Strang Nicklin's Crew

BY PAUL WARWICK.

Meek submission was writ all over the faces of a badly-bunged and quite patched-up Atlanta baseball team Saturday afternoon as it bowed to the second whipping in two afternoons by the Chattanooga Lookouts. This time the score was 11 to 2, and candidly, the game was not near as close as the score would seem to indicate.

Home-town scribes, scribbling along about their team, are more than likely liable to get themselves accused of flaunting the flaming alibi—but one can scarcely avoid putting in a word for the almost-defenseless Crackers, in the shape they presented yesterday afternoon.

Of course, the fact that neither Benny Karr nor Hollis McLaughlin could quite get going can not be attributed to the way the rest of the line-up stacked up—but it must have had its mental and moral effect on this pair of good twirlers. Old Benjamin was forced to seek the showers along about the shank of the piteous contest, and Hollis was unable to stem the tide of the lowly Lookouts' determination. The Lookouts, intoxicated with a victory the day previous, went wild in their enthusiasm over swamping the Crackers, and did it. Wingfield, a-twirling for the visitors, had the number of the assembled Crackers, and the home bats did not crack with their usual frequency—albeit Big Ben Paschall had a perfect day at bat, with three out of three.

Three in Regular Position.

With the exception of the pitchers, only three Atlanta men were in their regular positions. And starting at the home plate and pursuing a fairly straight course down the third-base line, you can discover that trio, Johnny Brock, back o' the bat, "Red" Smith, on third, and Ben Paschall in left. Center field was occupied thrice—by Francis, a left-handed pitcher; McCabe, who really is a center fielder, and Moore, another forkhanded tosser.

Right field was divided between Right Fielder Zoellers and Center Fielder McCabe. First base was shared by Roy Moore, left-handed pitcher, and Dick Burrus, really a first baseman. Second base was alternately occupied by Utility Man Hillis and Right Fielder Zoellers. Shortstop was played by Shortstop Krehmeyer and Utility Man Hillis.

Outside of those changes, the line-up was pretty much the usual line-up.

Manager Bertram Niehoff, who seems to be having more than his share of trouble this year, was absent from the park and, naturally, the game, on account of the illness of his wife, who was operated on Saturday morning. Atlanta friends of the couple will be glad to learn that Mrs. Niehoff is resting nicely after the operation. Bert, however, will not accompany the team on its road trip, but will turn over the managerial reins temporarily to Bill McCabe.

Other woe is added to the Cracker list by the malaria germ which continues to pursue Dick Burrus. General weakness and a slight fever kept Dick from starting the game Saturday, but he got in after being called upon to pinch hit for Ray Francis in the latter stages.

Add another—while attempting to field a hard chance Saturday afternoon, "Dutch" Krehmeyer fell and wrenched his knee, with the result that he was withdrawn from the line-up. He will leave with the team, however.

Well, this sounds like a doleful chant, but there's one bright spot in it all—Saturday was pay-day for the woebegone Cracker outfit.

The game? What can you say about a game like that? Bates, the first man up, cracked a home run to right center. You can learn about the game from him. Thereafter, the Lookouts made ten other separate and distinct runs; the Crackers made two at separate times. That's about all there is to report.

Detail of Cracker-'Nooga Game

With a badly patched lineup, necessitated by the serious illness of Manager Niehoff's wife and an injury to Krehmeyer in the first inning, the Atlanta Crackers were decisively beaten 11 to 2 Saturday afternoon by the Chattanooga Lookouts.

Wingfield, the all-round handy man of the Lookouts, was in the box for Chattanooga and had the Crackers well in hand all through the game. Several times Atlanta had three men on bases but Wingfield tightened up and prevented any damage.

Brock, Paschal and Smith were the only Atlanta players that finished the game in the positions in which they started. Atlanta used Francis, Moore and McCabe in centerfield and Hillis was sent to second in place of Niehoff and then shifted to short, when Krehmeyer was injured in fielding a ball.

First Inning.

CHATTANOOGA — Bates greeted Karr with a home run to right center field. Carroll hit to Moore behind first base, who threw to Karr, but Benny dropped the ball. J. Anderson walked, sending Carroll to second base. Niehaus attempted to sacrifice both runners up a base, but Karr forced Carroll at third to Smith. Clarke beat out a hit to short, filling the bases. D. Anderson grounded out, Krehmeyer to Moore, J. Anderson scoring on the play. Milner walked, again filling the bases. Massey singled to left field, scoring Niehaus and Clarke. Milner took third. Wingfield grounded out, Hillis to Moore. Four runs, three hits, one error.

ATLANTA—Zoellers flied out to Carroll. McCabe grounded out, Massey to Niehaus. Paschal beat out an infield hit. Paschal took second on Wingfield's wild pitch. Moore grounded in front of the plate and was out, D. Anderson to Niehaus. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Inning.

CHATTANOOGA—Krehmeyer was hurt in fielding a ball in the first inning and Hillis was shifted to short stop, Zoellers took over second base, McCabe went to right field and Francis was placed in center field. Bates beat out an infield hit. Carroll sacrificed Bates to second and was out at first, Brock to Moore. J. Anderson grounded out, Karr to Moore. Niehaus singled past third base, scoring Bates. Niehaus went out stealing second, Brock to Zoellers. One run, two hits, no errors.

ATLANTA—Smith was safe on first when Clarke fumbled his easy roller. Francis flied out to J. Anderson. Hillis popped out to Bates. Brock grounded out, Clarke to Niehaus. No runs, no hits, one error.

Third Inning.

CHATTANOOGA—Clarke singled past third base. D. Anderson hit to Moore, who tagged him on the line. Clarke took second base. Miller struck out. McCabe made a beautiful running catch of Massey's liner. No runs, one hit, no errors.

ATLANTA—Karr struck out. Zoellers grounded out, Massey to Niehaus. McCabe also grounded out, Massey to Niehaus. No runs, no hit, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

CHATTANOOGA — Wingfield grounded out, Hillis to Moore. Bates fouled out to Brock. Carroll also fouled out to Brock. No runs, no hits, no errors.

ATLANTA—Paschal beat out a hit through short. Moore also beat out an infield hit, sending Paschal to second. Smith forced Moore at second, Bates to Massey; Paschal took third. Francis flied out to J. Anderson. Paschal held third and Smith was held on first base. Hillis grounded out, Wingfield to Niehaus. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Fifth Inning.

CHATTANOOGA—J. Anderson grounded out, Smith to Moore. Niehaus flied out to Paschal. Clarke grounded out, Smith to Moore. No runs, no hits, no errors.

ATLANTA—Brock singled to left field. Karr forced Brock at second, Clarke to Massey. Zoellers hit into a double play, Wingfied to Clarke to Niehaus. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Sixth Inning.

CHATTANOOGA — D. Anderson walked. Milner also walked. Massey beat out a bunt in front of the plate, filling the bases. McLaughlin relieved Karr on the mound for Atlanta. Wingfield hit the first ball pitched by McLaughlin to left field for two bases, scoring D. Anderson and Milner and sending Massey to third. Bates popped out to Brock. Carroll walked, filling the bases. J. Anderson lifted a long fly to Francis and Massey scored after the catch. Niehaus singled to center, scoring Wingfield. Carroll was out trying to make third, Francis to Smith. Four runs, three hits, no errors.

ATLANTA—McCabe doubled to left center. Paschal hit a hot single down the third base line and McCabe took third. Moore grounded out to first. Smith beat out an infield hit, filling the bases. Burrus batted for Francis and grounded out, Massey to Niehaus, McCabe scoring on the play. Hillis flied out to Carroll. One run, three hits, no errors.

GIBBONS COULD GIVE MANY TITLE-HOLDERS LESSONS

Very Few Tricks of Game Tom Doesn't Know; Has New Style for Every Man

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

Tom Gibbons isn't a champion, but he could give many of the title holders a boxing lesson. There are few tricks of the game Tom doesn't use. He has style of fighting for every man he meets. Before every fight of any importance Gibbons makes a close study of the other fellow's fighting style, and then perfects an attack and a defense to meet it.

I have seen Tom Gibbons in many of his best bouts, from the time he first came east as a sparring partner for brother Mike right up to date. Tom always was good, from the start, and when brother Mike always insisted that some time Tom would be a better fighter than he was. We used to think that was brotherly love on Mike's part. But Mike was right. Tom has all the tricks and all the skill Mike used to have, and is much more aggressive and confident.

Fifty-Six Misses.

Watching Tom Gibbons against Dempsey at Shelby last year, and again at Michigan City when he outboxed the swift and dangerous Carpentier with supreme ease, I have come to the conclusion that as the sport stands today Gibbons has no superior in skill among the heavyweights. Jack Dempsey is a much better fighter, being stronger, faster and more aggressive than Gibbons, and packing a much heavier punch. But Dempsey has little of Tom's exceptional skill in defense. As for the rest of the heavies, some of them, like Firpo and Wills, might wear him down by sheer strength and bulk, but not one of the lot could outbox him for a single round.

In boxing Tom has everything. His fight with Carpentier at Michigan City was an extremely interesting exhibition of what skill can do when pitted against speed and punch. Carpentier was like a man with a single-shot rifle against a machine gunner. He had just one effective punch, a spectacular straight right for the chin. That punch of Carpentier's went over like a bullet, and he didn't slow it up by using either a swing or a hook.

The punch traveled the shortest route toward Gibbons' jaw and traveled fast. Carpentier, used to depending upon that right, knew how to time it when he found an opening. He would have hit any slower and less alert fighter than Gibbons. Tom made him miss with that right just fifty-six times in ten rounds, and only one punch even grazed Gibbons. That one hit high on the side of his head as he ducked, and jarred him for a couple of seconds. Any of the fifty-six missing rights, landing on the chin of a slower boxer than Tom, might have been a finisher.

Gibbons went into the ring knowing all about Carpentier's dangerous right hand. From the first ball he watched it like a hawk. But he didn't bend over and hold his arms high as a guard. He stood straight up, lifted his left shoulder to partly cover his chin, and moved in on Carpentier steadily.

Learned From Dempsey.

When the right hand came sizzling across Gibbons sometimes pulled away just enough to make it miss by an inch. Sometimes he rolled his head to the right and either let the punch go over his neck or turned it with his boulder. Sometimes he bobbed away three or four inches to the left, let the gloved fist almost graze him, and stepping quickly in drove a sharp counter punch into Carpentier's ribs. And sometimes he ducked straight down and let the blow shoot over his head. He had such a variety of ways of getting away from Georges' right hand that Carpentier wasn't able to guess where Tom would move to next, and curve the punch a bit to allow for it. Without a single mistake he saw that right hand start fifty-six times, driven suddenly and with terrific speed, and avoided every blow. Carpentier must have nearly thrown his right arm off in that fight. It was the only punch he had that was worth a plugged nickel, and he could not land that.

Besides holding Carpentier helpless, Gibbons did about as he pleased in hitting the speedy Frenchman. He could find Carpentier whenever he wanted to, with a long left that started like a straight jab and finished with a twisting wrist like Kid McCoy's once-famous "corkscrew punch." He knocked Carpentier's head back often with that well-timed jab, although the Frenchman was usually fast enough to pull away and partly break the force of the blow. He ripped an occasional right over. But it was at the infighting and closework that Gibbons was master.

Perhaps Gibbons learned all about that right hand punch below the edge of the left ribs in his fight with Dempsey at Shelby. It is one of the champion's favorites. He nearly broke Gibbons down with it in the first two or three rounds. After that Tom developed a trick of pulling his left arm back suddenly and spearing Dempsey's fist with his elbow. Dempsey stopped using his punch. It's too easy to break a hand. But Carpentier knew nothing of the elbow defense, and Gibbons hit him as often as he wanted to, forcing the Frenchman to break and jump back.

Belongs Among Light-Heavies.

Tom is a bird that can learn during a fight, and adopt new methods whenever necessary. I once saw him in a bout with Billy Miske, when it looked as if Miske might knock Tom over into the press rows any moment with vicious short left and right hooks. Tom managed to roll his head out of danger, and after a while he began bobbing down and whipping his left hand into Miske's body just as Miske reached for him. A few rounds of body blows took all danger out of any punch Miske could send over.

Gibbons looks wide open and easy to hit. But he's one of the hardest men in the world to plant a glove on. His specialty is avoiding blows. He does it with a grin, as if it amused him. He is a very good fighter. Gibbons is hard to hit and hard to hurt. In fighting he is very quick to take advantage of any opening, and he rarely misses when he lets a hard blow go. He has a good, hard punch in either hand, but not a devastating punch like Dempsey's. While Gibbons is well built and always in condition, he doesn't show the strength he would need to meet the real heavyweights on even terms. He belongs among the light-heavyweights and should be fighting such men as Tunney, McTigue, Berlenbach and Stribling. Too bad Tom hasn't 15 pounds more weight with his present condition. That much bigger he'd give even Jack Dempsey a run for a title, especially as such a bout would go to a referee's decision and Gibbons' wide knowledge of the game would do much to offset Dempsey's reckless aggressiveness and the champion's hitting power.

How Gibbons Whipped Carpentier

Meusel and Cole Suspended For Part Yank-Tiger Fight

Chicago, June 14.—President Johnson, of the American league, today suspended Bob Meusel, outfielder with the Yankees, and Bert Cole, Detroit pitcher, as a result of the New York-Detroit game, which broke up in riotous disorder yesterday.

Action against the other players involved, including the possible suspension of Babe Ruth, was deferred until more complete reports from the umpires have been received. The suspension of Meusel and Cole was ordered when President Johnson read preliminary reports from Umpire Billy Evans, who forfeited the game to New York in the 9th inning when the police were unable to clear the field.

Cole, pitching for the Tigers, hit Meusel in the back with a pitched ball, and Meusel, throwing down his bat, rushed at the Tiger pitcher. He swung at him but missed and the umpires dragged the infuriated Yankee outfielder away before he could take another swing.

After Cole and Meusel had been ordered out of the game Meusel, reports to President Johnson said, rushed over to the Tiger bench and took a swing at one of the Detroit players which resulted in a free-for-all fight among members of both teams.

Montgomery Net Meet Will Start

Montgomery, Ala., June 14.—The Montgomery Country club's first annual tennis tourney will be staged here during the coming week. Enthusiasm over the affair is running high and interest in the net pastime is booming as never before. More than thirty entries have already been received and prospects for a successful meet are exceptionally bright.

Two of the recently completed new batch of courts at the local club are equipped with a novel lighting arrangement which makes possible play at night. It is planned to stage quite a few of the matches in the coming tournament at night, giving a unique touch to the meet.

Great Battle Is Expected Between Flowers-Anderson

Delayed action on the part of one Jim Erwin, who promotes fights in Juarez, Mexico, insures Atlanta fans of seeing one of the best fights of the year here on July 3, when at the city auditorium Tiger Flowers, dusky middleweight, battles Lee Anderson, colored light-heavyweight champion of the world, over a 12-round distance.

Erwin wanted Flowers to fight in his city on July 3, with Anderson as his opponent. However, he waited too late to secure the match, although he offered Flowers a $1,500 guarantee and the privilege of carting away a liberal slice of the gross receipts. While that offer might amount to more than Flowers will collect here, Miller turned it down as he had already announced that the two dusky scrappers would fight for the title here.

There is no doubt but what the fight would have drawn well at Juarez, as it was in that city that Anderson and Flowers first met, with the former winning a knockout in the seventh round. This is the third meeting between the two, and in their recent appearance at New York Flowers won the decision by a barrelful of points.

When he was knocked down and out by Anderson he was just getting started in the ring business. He has learned a lot since that time as his decision over Anderson proves.

While there is plenty of room for argument regarding the relative ability of the two fighters, both boys are going to strain a point to settle the question of their superiority in their go here. Flowers resents a lot of talk Anderson has been handing out about how he will paste the Georgia star into submission and is going to try and put a stop to such chatter by knocking Anderson clear out of the ring.

Willie Gibbs, who directs the ring and business affairs of Anderson, is mighty confident that his boy will repeat his Juarez stunt of putting Flowers down for the count of ten. In fact, he is so sure of his fighter that he has boldly come out and predicted that Atlanta fans will see Flowers stretched out before the fight reaches the halfway mark. Such a threat has not disturbed Flowers to any noticeable degree and he is planning to end the scrap the same way.

Walk Miller has announced that Irish Benny Cline and Battling Budd will fight on the Flowers-Anderson card against equally matched opponents, yet unsecured. Miller claims that Cline is the Berlenbach of the south and the latter's impressive record of nine kayoes out of twelve fights bears out the statement. Budd has been showing a lot of class of late and has the reputation of never failing to please the customers when he fights.

Speaker Reduces Squad to Limit

Cleveland, June 14.—Manager Tris Speaker of the Cleveland Indians cut his roster to 25 players today. He released Pitchers G. H. Edmondson to Des Moines of the Western league and Frank Jeric unconditionally.

Camp Talks Of Olympic Training

BY WALTER CAMP.
(Special Correspondent of The Constitution.)

(Copyright, 1924, for The Constitution.)

New York, June 14.—Now that America's best athletes have qualified for participation in the Olympic games, the big question arises—how many of them actually will participate? At the last Olympics, some of our best men pulled up lame before their final tries. Indeed, the situation got so bad that American sport lovers on this side of the water hardly dared look at their morning papers during the days preceding the big contests, for fear they would read of another American put out by injury.

The great question that should interest our trainers and our physical experts in general is whether these accidents are a necessary accompaniment of high-class performance. The writer is under the impression that we do not know nearly as much concerning this subject as we ought to, and that it is worth while to study it more closely, not alone in relation to winning or losing in future Olympic contests, but also as a national question for us as a people.

If the development of the highest possible speed is to be always connected with the imminent danger of pulling up lame, then of course such high-class performance is a detriment rather than an advantage, as for instance when we enter upon the supreme test of war, for that is, after all, the most vital point of physical fitness for a race or nation.

Makes Test.

The writer has been much impressed with the growing belief that anything like unnatural exercise, to extend the stride, brings the runner very close to the danger point. Within the last two years he has had opportunity to test this theory, and in one or two cases to predict that as a result of unnatural exercise certain runners would eventually pull up lame. One of these exercises was the throwing of the whole leg up over the head—high kicking, in other words. Runners who have attempted this have been peculiarly subject to lameness, and in the case of one of our fastest men, the writer predicted this result, which speedily came to pass.

If all this is true—and of course it is only a supposition as yet—then nature is only demonstrating once more that her plan is to prepare the individual for the job that he is doing daily and regularly, and that she looks with disapproval upon any unnatural over-strenuous or extreme exercises which go outside of the province of the particular job.

In other words, if the runner devotes himself to running, she pretty well takes care of him but if he has the belief that by throwing his leg up over his head daily as a preparation he may extend his stride in running, she is very apt to give him notice that he is incorrect by causing him to pull up lame on the track when he is making his greatest effort.

Smyrna Wants Game.

St. James Looks Good for Headliner of 3-Year-Olds

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., June 14. St. James, hero of last September's revivals of the $75,000 Belmont park futurity, richest of the country's great produce for 2-year-olds, after a preliminary campaign at Saratoga in which he acquitted himself brilliantly, promises to be one 3-year-old headliner of the coming August racing of the Saratoga Association for the Improvement of the Breed of Horses. Stanwix, victor at Pimlico in November of the first of the two divisions of the $10,000 Walden handicap, one of the hardest autumn tests at one mile for 2-year-olds, bids fair to be another.

St. James is not the major casualty he looked to be at Belmont park five weeks ago when he pulled up lame after a gallop in muddy going of one mile and a furlong that was to have been his last trial for the then impending renewal at Pimlico of the $65,000 Preakness, one of racing's three great spring specials for 3-year-olds. Stanwix, which on his splendid performance in the Walden, was regarded one of the most brilliant of the 3-year-old prospects, is not near the wreck he appeared to be a couple of weeks before St. James came to grief after a careless hand of Samuel C. Hildreth's staff had inadvertently jabbed a pitchfork tine in one of his hind legs.

St. James' left foreleg "filled" just above the ankle joint so badly after his unfortunate trial gallop for the Preakness that both George D. Widener and his trainer, A. J. Joyner, were dismayed. They announced immediately that St James would be turned out for the season on Mr. Widener's Erdenheim farm, near Philadelphia, the place on which the late Aristides Welsh bred and raised Iroquois, British Derby winner of 1881 under the silks of the first Pierre Lorillard, to the end that he might race again next year. Joyner was convinced that the middle tendon had been ruptured. For such an injury rest is the only dependable remedy. Stanwix's leg swelled so badly and developed so much fever following the jab from the pitchfork Hildreth informed Harry F. Sinclair that it was a question whether he could be got to the post again.

Injury Is Well.

Joyner let St. James alone for a couple of weeks because the colt was so lame he could not well do anything else. The injury righted itself. In a fortnight's time St. James was walking soundly, in another week he was breezing halves in 50 seconds. Now he is galloping halves in 48 and betraying every desire to go on. St. James was always a generous worker. He may race at Aqueduct. He had a lot of training for the Preakness before his misadventure at Belmont park. It is not likely, however, that anything serious will be asked of him before August. Stanwix, whose recovery has been slower, is not so far along. But, he, also, had plenty of galloping in March and April, first at Rancocas farm, then at Belmont park Hildreth will not experience difficulty in getting him ready for his Saratoga engagements.

The recoveries of St. James and Stanwix restore to racing a couple of colts that could not have been had in April for $150,000. They are still worth all of $100,000. St. James, a 16-hander of epic dimensions, probably, is the handsomest thoroughbred on the continent. After he had made Zev, last season's 3-year-old sensation and now, with $293,000 to his credit, the leading money winner of world thoroughbred history, look bad at Jamaica in a renewal of the Paumonok handicap, he became favorite in the preliminary Preakness betting. If he had won the Preakness eastern racing folk would have bet tens of thousands that he would have gone to Louisville and accomplished a "double" by winning Kentucky's $75,000 golden jubilee Derby. Sir Barton is the only horse that has so far won revivals of the Preakness and the Kentucky Derby. St. James on his achievements at Sartoga last August and his Belmont park futurity and Paumonok handicap performances looked as good in the May past as Sir Barton had in May, 1919.

St. James and Stanwix will jazz Saratoga three-year-old racing up briskly. Bracadale, Aga Khan, Mad Play, Ordinance, Transmute, Sheridan, Klondyke, Ladkin, Laurano, Worthmore, Modest, Samaritan, Sunpal and the other colts that have been winning fame and money during the term of their enforced idleness will have to step about in revivals of the Miller and Travers stakes, the Saranac and Huron handicaps and the Saratoga Cup. Their return to form invests Saratoga three-year-old racing with an uncertainty that heightens anticipatory interest in it. St. James is in the Travers, a $12,000 gallop of one mile and a quarter for three-year-old colts and fillies, and the Saranac handicap, a dash of one mile, also the Saratoga and Merchants and Citizens, $10,000 handicaps of one mile and a quarter and one mile and three-sixteenths for three-year-olds and over, and the Saratoga Cup, a weight-for-age gallop of one mile and three-quarters. Stanwix is in these races and the Huron Miller and Champlain as well.

FRANK OWENS WINS TENNIS TITLE OF CAROLINAS

Winner Over Jack Caldwell In Play-Off; Atlanta Pair Wins Doubles Championship

Greenville, S. C., June 14.—(Special.)—Frank Owens, of Atlanta, won the singles championship of the Carolinas here this afternion defeating Jack Caldwell, also of the same city, in the remaining set of their match, postponed from yesterday because of darkness. Later in the afternoon, paired with Caldwell, they annexed the doubles title by defeating the strong Greenville team of Robertson and Grier, 6-4, 7-5, 9-7.

Caldwell won the first game of the postponed set, but it proved to be his last as the steadiness of Owens was too much to overcome. Both played a very safe game in this short engagement.

The doubles matches produced some good tennis, and the large gallery that was on hand was thrilled time and time again at some of the rallies that took place.

Robertson, for the losers, put up the greatest game of doubles that he has ever flashed, and had his partner supported him with anything like as good tennis, the championship might have gone into other hands. Just behind Robertson came the heady and steady Owens. While the play of the Atlantan was not quite as spectacular as that of the Greenville man, it was a masterly exhibition of doubles play. Caldwell was not up to his usual standard, making a great many nets off of volleys and being particularly unsteady on his ground stroke. He got better as the match progressed but at no stage did he exhibit the tennis he is capable of playing.

Owens-Robertson Star.

While Grier and Caldwell were badly off, the play of their partners more than made up for it to make it a splendid match to watch.

The local team had a great chance to take the second set when they led on Caldwell's serve at 5-4 and 15-40. The Atlanta team took a fine brace at this point and took that game and the next two.

Again in the third set the Greenville pair led at 5-4 and with Caldwell serving, had the count love-40. Once again the Gate City team dug in and finally ran the game out.

The following is a recapitulation of the score:

PLAYER—	N.	O.	P	D.	S.
Owens	15	15	20	0	0
Caldwell	31	15	14	4	2
Grier	32	26	16	4	1
Robertson	19	20	34	3	0

Immediately after the doubles final the cups were presented to the various winners by J. E. Sirrine president of the club and this ceremony brought to a close the best and fastest tournament that has ever been held in this city.

Ohio State Goes Tie With Michigan

Chicago, June 14.—Ohio State went into a tie with the University of Michigan for the western conference baseball championship this afternoon when the Buckeye nine defeated Chicago, 9 to 0, in the last game of the big ten season. It was the tenth defeat for the Maroons, who failed to win one game in the race.

In the final standing Ohio State and Michigan appear with eight victories and two defeats apiece. Wisconsin is third.

Murphy Winner at Altoona; Wonderlich Hurt in Crash

Altoona, Pa., June 14.—(By the Associated Press.)—The semi-annual 250-mile automobile race on the Altoona speedway this afternoon for a purse of $25,000 and points in the 1924 national championship was captured by the veteran driver, Jimmy Murphy, who pushed his car to an average of more than 114 miles an hour, a new track record. Murphy flashed home in 2:11:2, leading Fred Comer across the line by more than six miles. Antoine Mourre, of France, a newcomer in American racing circles, was a close third.

Jerry Wonderlich, one of America's speed monarchs, came to grief on the back track, which was made dangerous by intermittent rainfall during the afternoon. Driving at breakneck speed in an effort to catch the fast flying leaders, Wonderlich's car skidded not far from the spot where Howard Wilcox met his death last year. The machine flashed down the wet boards and crashed to the infield, with Wonderlich under the wreckage. He was carried from the field unconscious and the thousands of spectators were stunned when the official announcer told them that the valiant driver had died in the field hospital of a broken neck. This report was unfounded, for Wonderlich was alive and in an Altoona hospital suffering from a brain concussion and a broken ankle. The attending doctors tonight announced that his condition was as good as could be expected and that his chances for recovery were excellent.

Lead Is Alternated.

The fortunes of the race alternated frequently until Murphy took the lead. Harry Hartz and Tommy Milton, who finished fourth and fifth, led the pack at the outset, driving their powerful machines to the limit. For a time it was feared that the rain would case a halt, but the judges decided otherwise and the machines thundered on. Murphy, who drove the race with but one stop to change a tire in the record time of eight and a fraction seconds, forged ahead and at the halfway mark the 1922 champion flashed into the lead. He held the position to the end.

The drivers found it hard to keep their cars on the slippery board incline.

Time and again the spectators were brought to their feet when one of the machines lost traction and skidded down the slope. When five of the racers finished the 250-mile grind, the judges, fearing another accident because of the rainfall, ordered the others flagged from the track.

Murphy, by virtue of his victory, took the lead in championship points and a $9,000 prize. Comer was awarded $4,500; Mourre $2,500; Hartz $1,750, and Milton $1,250. As the other drivers were flagged, the judges will award additional prizes later.

Balloon Race Will Start Today

Brussels, June 14.—(By the Associated Press.)—Seventeen balloons, representing seven nations, are being made ready for the take-off at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the fourteenth renewal of the Gordon Bennett cup race for lighter-than-air balloons. Electric storms—the bugbear of balloonists—threatened for a time, but tonight the weather had cleared somewhat and the latest report from the Belgian Aero club is that in all probability the race will be started according to schedule. If there is a continuance of the wind prevailing tonight the balloons will be carried toward Central Europe, perhaps Russia.

According to the drawings made at the aero club tonight the balloon Belgica, piloted by Lieutenant E. de Muyter, of Belgium, will be the first to take off at 4 o'clock. Then, at five-minute intervals, the balloons will start as follows:

The Picardie, France, with Maurice Bienaime; Pelvetia, Switzerland, Captain Paul Armbruster; Goodyear, United States, W. G. Vanorman; Aerostier, Italy, Grassi; Margaret, Great Britain, Allen; Magdalene, Spain, Ferandez Duio; Vile de Bruxels, Belgium, Lieutenant LaBrousse; Vilde Bordeaux, France, LaPorte; Uncle Sam, United States, Captain E. H. Honeywell; Crampino, Italy, Major Joseph Valle; Banshee III, Great Britain, Major Baldwin; Captain, Spain, Penarandes; Prince Leopold, Belgium, Veenstra; D'Anjou, France, Georges Cormier; S-14, United States, Major Peck; Hesperio, Spain; Casas.

Lieutenant de Muyter and Captain Honeywell ar efavorites to win the race.

Tate Is Winner From Marietta

Cartersville, Ga., June 14.—(Special.)—In a pitchers' battle between 'Hap' Henderson and Hamilton in which honors were about even, Tate defeated Marietta on a wet and slippery field by a score of 1 to 0. The game was played in Cartersville, this place being selected as neutral ground.

Tate's lone tally came in the sixth inning, resulting from an error by Maurer and two successive singles. Marietta succeeded in getting only one man past second base during the entire game.

Features of the game were the sensational fielding of Parrish for Marietta and Parks and L. Hawkins for Tate.

The two nines will meet in Tate Tuesday and in Marietta Wednesday.

Two Games Played At Almand Park

Two games were played at Almand park yesterday. The American Can team won from Scottdale by the score of 4 to 3, and the Center Hill club won from the Western Heights by the score of 7 to 6.

The game between Scottdale and the Can Company was a pitchers' battle between Hammond for Scottdale and "Slim" Schmidt for the American Can team, with Schmidt getting the best of it at the finish. The Scottdale boys had the game 3 to 0 up until the last half of the ninth, when the "Canners" started a batting rally, led by Bell, Schmidt, Carpenter and Sumlin, and drove in four runs which was enough to win the game. Moore, of the Scottdale club, made a nice running catch in right field that was labeled for a home run, and Chambers, of the Can club, got a line drive in left field that brought the crowd to their feet.

The batteries in this game were Hammond and Mize for Scottdale; Schmidt and Garvin for American Can.

PASCHAL THREATENS LEADERS FOR HITTING HONORS

Lapan Is Still In Lead With Smith 2nd

Paschal, Atlanta, is beginning to threaten the leaders in the Southern Association. Being well down the line last week, the speedy gardener has been stepping on the heels of the others and yanked himself up to fifth place in the standing among the leading sluggers.

Not only has he hit the ball consistently but also hard, having added two home runs to his totals, now having 10 for a league lead. Aside from that, he has taken a fresh grip on the lead in runs, having 53 to his credit at present.

Lapan, of Little Rock, has a comfortable margin over the other hitters, the same as he had last week, and is still around the .400 mark. Smith, of Atlanta, has increased his percentage, even though he has been unable to overtake the hard-hitting Lapan. Knode, of Birmingham, and Carlisle, of Memphis, have been holding their own. Taylor, of Memphis, is not far behind the others, with Stewart just below Paschal.

There has been a lot of stepping on the base paths. Marriott, of Mobile, stealing three bases in one day, has bunched his total to 20, which is four ahead of Stewart, of Birmingham. Graff, of Nashville, has become an increasingly valuable sacrifice hitter, the third-sacker having hung up 15 to date.

Little Rock may not figure much in the race, but the Arkansans have been hitting the ball with a vengeance, as a team having gone to the top, displacing Birmingham in this position. Atlanta is not far away. New Orleans has improved slightly.

New Orleans plays its usual defensive game and there has been little change among the teams in this department.

Hollingsworth, of New Orleans, has become the leading pitcher with 13 won and three lost. Warmoth, Memphis, is nearest.

National League.

Rogers Hornsby, of St. Louis, has caught up with and passed Catcher Snyder of the Giants for the lead in hitting in the National League. The margin has been getting bigger the last few days even though the hard-working backstop has fought against odds to hold the advantage.

Wheat, of Brooklyn, has played a marvelously consistent game and is where he was last week. His teammate, Fournier, has bumped up against some tough pitching and has dropped down among the secondary performers. Jacques, however, has not lost his knack in getting the ball over the fence and is making a gallant attempt to overtake his rival in the junior circuit.

Hartnett, of Chicago, has added two circuit clouts to his collection and is second to the Brooklyn slugger, with eight. Williams, of Philadelphia, has added one for a total of seven. Cy has improved his all around hitting average considerably.

Grantham, of Chicago, leads in stolen bases but is hotly pursued by Bigbee and Carey, of Pittsburg. That Pittsburg has the best set of "burglars" in the league is apparent considering that Maranville and Traynor are right behind their two mates.

Frisch, of New York, still has it his own way in collecting runs, being leader by a safe margin.

Among those who are edging towards the top in hitting is Bressler, of Cincinnati, who has been subbing for the ailing Daubert at first. He is now fifth in the rating. Youngs and Tierney are two others who are lodging the leaders.

New York has fallen down in hitting as a team but is still leader. Chicago has improved in hitting, being second. Pittsburg has the edge over Boston in the defensive part of the game.

There has been some sterling pitching in the old circuit with Grover Alexander, of Chicago, being easily the leader with nine won and one lost. Vance, of Brooklyn, and Ring, of Philadelphia, are nearest to the Chicago veteran.

American League.

The sensation of the league during the past week has been Maurice Archdeacon, of the Chicago White Sox. Although he can hardly as yet be figured with the regulars he has speeded for a .333 average to .369.

Speed tells the tale as nothing else brought him where he is. Beating out four infield taps in one game gives an indication of what he can do. There is no one faster in the league today than this former International leaguer. He is lightning going to first, and has been compared with Harry Bay in this respect.

Whether he will keep up his "infield" hitting remains to be seen, but he is beginning to have some of the top-notchers worried. Harry Heilmann is one of them. This Tiger slugger has been steadily dropping back of late, partly due to illness. He dropped the lead Thursday to Robertson, of St. Louis, who has been on Barry's heels right along even though he has not figured in as many games.

Jamieson, of Cleveland, is coming to the front after a belated start. Ruth, of New York, is holding his own and is among the first five. Cobb, of Detroit, has staged a comeback and is fifth among the regulars. He has the distinction of having played in every game in which his team has engaged and he has been at bat oftener than any other player in the league.

Harris, of Boston, has dropped back a few notches and the same holds true with his team-mate Boone. Falk, of Chicago, threatened to set the league on fire with his hitting but has fallen into a slump.

Babe Ruth, adding two more home runs to his totals, now has 15, with Williams, of St. Louis, nearest. The work on the bases has been slow. Jamieson, of Cleveland, and Collins and Barrett, of Chicago, being tied for the lead. Ruth leads in total runs.

It wasn't on the cards that Washington should set the pace entirely in team hitting and the Senators are tied with Cleveland, with New York third. New York shows up best in the defensive part of the pastime.

The pitching during the week has been ordinary. Wingard, of St. Louis, leads at present, with Holloway, Bush and Whitehall nearest.

"Tiger" Flowers Defeats Lohman

New York, June 14.—Tiger Flowers, negro boxer from Atlanta, won the judges' decision over Joe Lohman, light heavyweight, of Toledo, in a 12-round bout tonight. Flowers weighed 165 and Lohman 172.

Sensation of Cracker Squad

The above shows three different poses of Mack Hillis, who hails from up Cambridge way, and is the Crackers' newest sensation. This young man, filling in as the utility man of the squad, has been going in great style during Bill McCabe's absence in center field. Hillis got off to a miserable start, but during the past ten days has boosted his stock in the fans' estimation considerably. His fielding and hitting have improved. Many big league scouts have been looking him over.

Kelly Running Wild.

New York, June 14.—George Kelly, with three home runs and a single, accounted for all Giant scores in New York's 8 to 6 victory over Cincinnati today and tied the modern league record for runs batted in during one game. The victory tied the Giants for first place with Chicago.

KELLY DUPLICATES FEAT OF 3 HOMERS.

New York, June 14.—George Kelly's feat of making three home runs in today's game with Cincinnati not only tied the modern record for runs batted in during a single game, but placed the Giant slugger in a class by himself as the only man in major league history who has twice hit three homers during a single contest. He first did the stunt September 17, 1923.

Ken Williams, of the Browns; Cy Williams, of the Phillies, and W. J. Henline, of the Athletics, are the only other players who have made three homers during a single contest in the 20th century. Bobby Lowe, of Boston, in 1894, and Ed Delehanty, of Philadelphia, in 1897, are the only major leaguers who have ever made four homers in a single game.

Kelly's home run total for the season now is six.

Double-Header At Fort Today

There will be two good baseball games at Fort McPherson this afternoon, the first between the Commodore Feds and a picked team from the Perrin league, which will start at 2 o'clock, and the second between the Perrin Athletics and a picked team from all of the amateur teams around the city.

The management at Fort McPherson has supplied a much larger seating capacity than before and has also placed a covering over the stands.

The games should be two of the best that have been played on the fort diamond this year, as the Perrin league is one of the strongest in amateur circles and a picked team will come from that league to play against the prisoners in the first game.

In the second game the players will be picked from all the amateur leagues around the city and be pitted against the Perrin Athletics. The second game will start at 4 o'clock.

Turner's No-Hit, No-Run Game Features Amateurs

"Tuck" Turner, a tall righthander of the Commodore Fed baseball team, pitched a no-hit, no-run contest Saturday afternoon against the Georgia Railway & Power Co. team. The game ended in a scoreless tie at the end of the ninth inning, the game being called at 4 o'clock because of the strict rules of the Prison that no athletics shall be played after the 4 o'clock hour.

It was one of the best pitching duels ever seen in local amateur circles and White, of the Power Company team, deserves much praise for his good work in allowing the Feds only two hits.

Turner did not walk a man and only hit one man, while White did not issue a free pass. Both pitchers had 10 strikeouts apiece.

Morgan of the Feds hit a long ball to center field that would have gone for three bases had it not hit a prisoner. He was credited with a three-bagger but could not score, so tight was the pitching of White.

There was good pitching generally among the amateur circles Saturday afternoon and only in one or two instances was the hitting heavy.

PACE SETTERS LOSE TWO.

The Georgia and West Point team played the Pace Setters two games Saturday and won both of them, the first being 5 to 2, and the second 3 to 0. The West Point team hit nine times in the first game to the Pace Setters' six, and in the second game the two teams each secured four hits.

Batteries: First game, Jones and Green, Lawson and Smith; second game, Ford and Green; Benton, McHenry and Roberts.

SPALDING LEAGUE.

The Knights of Columbus won two games from the Gordon Street Baracas at the Steel Plant diamond Saturday afternoon, the first one going at 3 to 1, and the second 8 to 5. The Baracas were cheered on by a crew of rooters who were not hard to look at, but the Knights did not allow their attention to be distracted by this. Hanlon made a nice play in the sixth inning of the first game when he went from first to third when Wrigley laid out a bunt on the third base line. They threw the ball to second to intercept him. But he wasn't there when the ball arrived. The Knights scored their first run on this play.

The Baracas rallied in the eighth but were put out after scoring one run. In the second game the Baracas took the lead 4 and 3 in the fourth inning, but the Knights came back in the sixth and scored four more and won the game.

JUNIOR CHAMBER WINS.

Errors and baseball that was up in the air lost another game for Oakland City Saturday. The Junior Chamber beat them, 6 to 4, in the weekly slugfest. The winners scored five runs in the fourth inning on two hits and Oakland City lost their last chance to win in the sixth when New hit a circuit clout with two men on the bags, but failed to touch second. New also made a difficult catch in the fifth after a hard run backwards. Baker, who started for Oakland, was wild and gave way to Green in the fourth inning. Green allowed the J. C. team only two hits in the seven innings he pitched. He also struck out nine men. Gilbert at third and "Goat" Holliday looked best for the winners.

POLICE LOSE.

The Atlantic Steel company boosted their average at the expense of the Police Department Saturday when they beat them in their weekly game, 13 to 2. Hendryx pitched a good game for the Police, and "Tubby" Walton, who has finally grown large enough to make the police force, managed to get in the way of all of his offerings. Bond knocked a home run, and triples were scored by Perkins, Bond and Walton. Landrum and Walton also knocked a pair of doubles. DIXIE LEAGUE.

The Ku Klux Klan team of the Dixie league played a double-header at Norcross against the First M. E. team and won both games, the first one, 12 to 0, and the second, 17 to 5.

In the first game Adams pitched a no-hit, no-run game and was supported in great style by his teammates. He struck out 12 men. Eldon Carlisle also did his share of the good work by knocking a home run.

In the second game the pitching of Garner, who struck out 10 of the Methodists, was phenomenal and Kinnett, Martin and Gulledge all knocked home runs. The whole Klan team hit well in the second session.

The Klan games are being played at Norcross because they have an enclosed diamond that is in good shape.

F. E. F. WINS DOUBLE BILL.

The F. E. F. team won two games from the Peachtree Road Presbyterians yesterday in rather slower style than usual. The Peachtree team has been shot to pieces lately, and those who stuck to their guns deserve a lot of credit for their attempt. Numerous errors resulted from the fact that they had not played together long.

The King Hardware team and the Western Electrics split a double-header Saturday, the Hardware team winning the first, 7 to 6, and losing the second, 9 to 8. The Terra Cotta team staged a rally in the ninth inning that netted one run, but Capes of the Coca-Cola team tightened up and stopped the rally one short of a tie score.

Both teams scored two runs in the first inning, and from then on it was a pitchers' battle between Capes of the Coca-Cola and Payne of the losers. Errors paved the way for the winning run in the eighth inning. McCash and Dugger hit well for the winners.

PAPER COMPANY WINS.

The Atlanta Paper company won an interesting 10-to-9 game over the Railway Mail Service nine Saturday afternoon at Fort McPherson. The feature of the game was the hitting and pitching of Cole of the winners. His triple in the ninth inning with the bases filled was responsible for the victory. He was out at the plate trying to make it a home run.

Berlit, Humphrey and Thomas hit well for the losers, but could do nothing with Cole's offerings except in the first and seventh innings, when 7 of the 9 runs were scored.

Humphrey struck out 9 men, but his wildness, coupled with one error and a timely pinch hit in the first inning, let in three runs. He weakened in the ninth inning and Cole laced out a triple that won the game.

The lone run for the losers came in the fourth inning on a single, a stolen base and another single. The first run for Whittier was scored in the eighth inning on a single, a stolen base and another single.

EAST SIDE BAPTIST LOSES.

PERRIN ROYAL LEAGUE.

Georgia Avenue Presbyterian continues to lead the Royal league with a perfect string of nine victories by winning over the B. M. B. C. team Saturday afternoon 11 to 4.

MANUFACTURERS LEAGUE.

The Panamco nine won a loosely played game from the A. B. & C. Co. by a score of 8 to 2. It was a pitcher's battle between Cain of the losers and Peel of the Panamco.

Cain gave up only six hits and had them well scattered but the seven errors on the part of his mates caused his defeat. Peel on the other hand gave up only two hits but those figured in the scoring of the two runs.

RED SEAL COMPANY LOSES.

The Gate City Cotton Mill team defeated the Red Seal Shoe nine by a 12-to-6 victory in a free-hitting contest. Both teams secured a number of hits. Errors helped very materially in the scoring.

weak and Giddens almost sank a four. They halved in five. Wenzler two up.

Giddens drove the green on the twentieth. Wenzler pulled into the rough at the right, topped his approach and lagged weakly, being down in four. Giddens played safe and got an easy three. Wenzler one up.

Drives were almost level at 270 yards on the 21st. Wenzler approached just in front of the green and Giddens followed with the same shot. Both lay six feet away on their third hole. Giddens missed his. Wenzler was two inches shorter. Wenzler two up.

On the twenty second Wenzler fell short with his tee shot, a high mashie. Giddens reached the green while Wenzler over-ran his approach. Giddens lagged one foot from the cup for a sure three leaving Wenzler a tenfooter for a half, which he calmly raked down. Kencler two up.

Beats Wenzler's Drive.

Giddens drove 275 yards on the 23rd tee, outdistancing Wenzler, who pulled a trifle to get down hill lie. Wenzler overshot his approach and Giddens played a high mashie within 25 feet of the cup. Wenzler's chip was weak and Giddens rolled for an easy four. Wenzler's try for a four went wide and Giddens tapped him for a win. Wenzler one up.

There was no advantage in drives on the 24th, both being long and down the center. Giddens' approach was straight to the green and Wenzler arched a high mashie 12 feet from the cup. Giddens almost holed his chip ball, rolling past five feet. Wenzler's try for a three rimmed the cup and hpoped out, laying Giddens a half stymie which he missed. Wenzler took four and Giddens five. Wenzler two up.

On the 25th tee Giddens' drive struck a spectator 75 yards from the tee. Wenzler's drive was long and true. He placed his second on the green and Giddens took a three to get home. Giddens badly overran with his fifth and Wenzler sank a 25-foot putt for an eagle three. Wenzler three up.

Wenzler was well on the green with a mashie tee shot on the 26th. Giddens was a bit short and his pitch and run were weak, leaving him a 15-footer. Wenzler overshot six feet and missed two putts, the hole being halved in five.

On the 27th Wenzler drove the green but the ball kicked to the right into the rough. Giddens pulled badly into the rough and in trying to get out pitched into a trap. He was on the green with his fourth shot. Wenzler got on the green in two and sank a birdie three. Wenzler four up.

Both in Trouble.

Wenzler drove within a scant ten feet of the 28th tee, Giddens laying to the left in the rough. Giddens chipped eight feet away and took his third. Wenzler was weak with his second and shot with his third. Wenzler two up.

Both drives were on a line 280 yards from the 29th tee. Wenzler overshot his approach and Giddens was short but had the better position. Both overran their third. Wenzler missed his putt for a four and Giddens took the hole by running down a ten-footer. Wenzler 3 up.

Giddens sliced out of bounds on the 30th tee and topped his second drive. Wenzler's drive was just short of the green. Giddens chipped near the green and lay four to Wenzler's one. Wenzler's chip hit the flagpole and bounced a foot to the right. Giddens conceded the hole.

Drives from the 31st tee were on a line, both rounding the dog leg for 285 yards. Wenzler was a bit short with a spoon on his second and chipped to within eight feet. Giddens was on the green with his second and over ran his third, a down hill putt. Wenzler missed his third. Wenzler 2 up.

Wenzler's drive on the 32d was down the middle. Giddens hooked to the rough and his second hooked into a ditch. His tee shot went on the green, over ran the cup. Wenzler took two to get on and they halved the hole in five. Wenzler 2 up.

From the 33d tee Wenzler's drive hit a bank back of the green but rolled down on the green. Giddens drove on the green, 25 feet from the cup. Wenzler lagged within eight inches for an easy three. Giddens' second was short by five feet and he missed his putt. Wenzler was down in three, increasing his lead to three up.

Both drives were short of the green on the 34th and approaches overran the cup. Wenzler attempted to hole out a 20-footer for a three, but was barely short. Giddens' final effort was a long curly putt of 15 feet that was deflected to the left. The hole was halved in four giving Wenzler the match and the championship, 3 up and 2 to play.

This is the way Jack Wenzler of Memphis became southern champion and carried the George W. Adair cup to the Colonial Country club. He played his game straight through with the skill and courage of the champion he is.

Giddens would have been happy to have won the coveted title. But he is happy anyway. "Someone had to lose," he remarked sagely after the match, "and I don't mind it so much as long as it was Jack

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

:: :: CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF THEDEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH :: ::

South Leads in Real Estate And Construction Activity

That the real estate market is maintaining a most gratifying activity, and that other conditions affecting the business are also adhering to a satisfactory level, is indicated by the fourth semi-annual survey of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, which was conducted during theh past few weeks.

Returns from questionnaires sent to 229 real estate boards, it was stated, indicate that the market is in a most healthy condition and "that the peak of 1923 is subsiding into a state of normal activity, in which buying is cautious and demands that actual value lie behind each asking price."

In summing up the survey, the following conclusions are reached, as given out by the report of the survey, just published:

(1) That the real estate market, except in isolated cases, manifests a satisfactory degree of activity. In many instances, the market is reported more active than last year, but a considerable majority report that the market is the same as last year, or not quite so active. In other words, the real estate market is becoming more and more normal.

(2) Residential rents have clearly passed the peak in the country as a whole and are being stabilized at present levels.

(3) Further inroads are reported on the shortage of structures. This is another indication of approach to a normal market condition.

(4) For the most part, money for the development of real estate is plentiful, but investors and lenders are assuming an attitude of caution and severity, particularly toward speculative enterprises.

(5.) The labor situation in the building trades is becoming more and more satisfactory.

Southeast Holds Lead.

(6) While there is considerable variation between different sections of the country with the greatest activity reported from the southeastern section, embracing Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi, the contrast between different sections is not so great as it was in November, 1923.

In giving a graphic report of market conditions it was shown that 30 per cent of the cities in the southern territory show that the present market in residential property is as active as last year; 33 per cent show a decrease in activity, while 37 per cent show a greater activity. The market for residential property, it was shown, is best of all in the southeastern section, where reports from 78 per cent of the cities show a better residential year, and 77 per cent of the cities show a better business property market. In neither the south central nor southeastern sections was it shown that there has been a falling off in activity for business property.

That the building shortage that stared the country in the face at the close of the world war is being rapidly overcome is also indicated by the National Association of Real Estate Boards' semi-annual survey.

"The largest volume of building construction ever recorded in the history of the country," it was stated, "is rapidly providing structures necessary to overcome the enormous shortage prevalent at the end of the war. The shortage of 68 per cent in single family dwellings for the entire country, as indicated in November last, has shrunk to 56 per cent at the present time. In apartments and business structures, the half-way mark has been reached, and the cities reporting such shortages have fallen from 54 to 41 for apartments and from 43 to 30 for business houses.

"A shortage still exists in apartments in the southeastern section, despite the big campaign of building such structures that has been steadily going on for several months."

The report sent out by the national real estate boards covers the entire construction, financial and labor situation, and gives many interesting facts and figures with references to demands for various kinds of houses, rents and labor.

Several types of the many splendid residences that have been erected in and around Atlanta during the record-breaking construction wave which is still at its height. No city, perhaps, in the south can boast as many handsome homes as may be seen in the city limits and in the metropolitan district, where several million dollars have been expended in the construction of beautiful modern homes of every type of architecture.

The photos above represent widely varying styles of architecture to be found in their highest development here and in practically every instance the splendid new homes have been designed to harmonize with the grounds and surroundings. Atlanta has justly earned the reputation of being a "city of beautiful homes."

Barbecue Given By Smith & Rankin To Realty Board

One of the most elaborate and highly enjoyed events of the Georgia barbecue season of 1924 was the splendid 'cue given at Morningside Saturday noon by the J. R. Smith & M. S. Rankin Real Estate company in honor of the Atlanta Real Estate board and about 200 other guests.

The magnificent sylvan banquet, consisting of barbecued meats of all varieties, with other tempting viands, was spread under a group of gigantic forest oaks at the corner of Rock Springs road and Morningside drive, in one of the most beautiful parts of this famous residence development. Near the scene of the feast is the recently dedicated memorial tablet to Woodrow Wilson, late ex-president of the United States. It was also within a few yards of the beautiful elm that was planted a short time ago in memory also of Wilson.

Responding to invitations were practically all the members of the real estate organization, who were the honor guests of this annual event: Mayor Walter Sims and members of general council, the board of Fulton county commissioners, prominent bankers, street railway officials, merchants and professional men of the city.

Following the fine dinner, which was served shortly after 1 o'clock, the guests were treated to a musical program rendered by the Georgia Railway & Power company quartet, which scored another popular hit with its selection of songs. The program also included a number of laughable stunts which were greatly enjoyed by the guests and a vote of thanks was accorded the hosts of the day.

Beautiful Morningside.

Morningside, the scene of the barbecue Saturday, is the property of the J. H. Smith & M. S. Rankin company, who have expended many thousands of dollars in bringing it to a beautiful state of development. It is one of the handsomest residence sections opened to the home-seeking public during the recent real estate building wave in this city. Many of the handsome lots have been sold, it is declared.

The beautiful subdivision lies on the route of Piedmont avenue, which is to be widened and repaved within a short time at the expense of Fulton county, making it one of the finest drives in the city. The improvements on Piedmont avenue will extend, it has been stated, from the capitol to the junction of the street with Peachtree road.

Following the feast given them Saturday the guests of the Smith & Rankin company were given an opportunity to inspect the handsome subdivision. They were shown not only the many improvements that have been added to enhance the natural beauty and advantages of the subdivision, but were given a view also of the many handsome homes that have been built within the past few months.

Sylvan Hills Will Be Handled by New Sales Syndicate

Announcement has been made of the taking over by a syndicate, composed of S. E. Davidson and R. L. Johnson, of "Sylvan Hills," one of the most beautiful of the recently developed residence districts of Atlanta. This beautiful subdivision lies on the south side of the city and is said to be one of the most splendid residence locations in Fulton county.

Sylvan Hills, with several hundred residences and residence sites, is served not only by the car lines, which runs within a convenient distance of the district, but by a number of splendidly paved arteries for automobile traffic. It has also been stated that this residence section will become the southern terminus of the proposed Cross-Town express, a new motor bus transportation company, which is planning to place a regular ten-minute schedule into effect about July 1. This transportation company, it has been pointed out, will give the residents in this portion of Atlanta a most convenient and pleasant means of reaching the center of the city. The Cross-Town express will run from Sylvan Hills through the center of the city, to Morningside, on the north, connecting the north and south sides of the city, and providing transportation to people who have no regular car line service at the present time.

The taking over of Sylvan Hills by Messrs. Davidson and Johnson, who will place it vigorously before prospective home seekers, is expected to greatly increase the activity of real estate in this and adjacent developments on the south side, where many beautiful residence sites are to be found.

Davidson Well Known.

Mr. Davidson, who has been in the local real estate field for several years, is one of the best known figures in the realty world. He has taken part in the transaction of many of the largest and most important real estate deals that have made Atlanta history within the past few years, and is is looked upon as one of the best-informed realtors in Atlanta. Mr. Davidson, after severing his connection with M. C. Kiser Realty Co., with whom he served for several years, opened an office for himself in the Grant building.

Mr. Johnson, who will be associated with S. E. Davidson in the marketing of Sylvan Hills, is also a well known figure in the real estate world of Atlanta. He has served with several of the largest and most important firms in the city, and is regarded as an authority on locations and values.

Sylvan Hills, with its improvements, was under the auspices of the J. R. Smith & M. S. Rankin Real Estate company, and a large number of its choice home sites were sold through the above agency.

Night Police Halt Mysterious Driver And Solve Mystery

Night after night for the last few months as regular as clockwork, a mysterious car has slipped through towns situated in the hills of southern New York state.

The police of one of these towns regularly caught fleeting glimpses of the car and decided to investigate it. They summoned a New York state trooper.

The trooper and a police officer lay in wait for the nightly visitor early one morning last week. Right on time the mysterious car came speeding along the road. The officers dashed into the middle of the road and signalled the driver to stop. They peered into the tonneau of the car. There stood two large cans.

"What have you got in this car?" demanded the trooper.

"Gasoline," answered the driver.

"Don't fool with me," snapped the officer. "Nobody's carting gasoline around 3 o'clock every morning.

"Well, take a look," invited the driver.

The officers did. They found just what the driver said they would find —gasoline.

"What are you tearing through here every night with gasoline for?" demanded the trooper. "What business are you in, anyway?"

"I'm test driver for the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car company," answered the driver, and he explained he was driving one of the fleet of test cars which are being driven over the road tenty-four hours a day prearatory to the introduction of Pierce-Arrow's new moderately priced, six-cylinder car this summer.

The style of her new business is the Georgia Realty company.

Mrs. Dowe, before going with Mrs. Ivey, had served with other local agencies, and her experience in the Atlanta realty world is said to have netted her a wealth of knowledge as to locations, values and other information of great worth to those dealing in real property.

"I specialized for a long time in homes," said Mrs. Dowe, "but I have decided to widen the scope of my business, and from now on I have decided to handle all classes of real estate transactions."

Mrs. Dowe has a wide circle of friends and business acquaintances, and many congratulations and well wishes have been extended to her since the announcement of her new business was published.

CANNON HONORED BY "JAY CEE" IN CINTI.

Fred Cannon, well known realty man, with the sales department of the J. H. Ewing & Sons Realty company, was signally honored during his recent visit to Cincinnati as a member of the Junior Chamber delegation sent there to secure the 1925 national convention for Atlanta.

Because of his tireless work in securing the financial success of the trip to the Queen City, Mr Cannon was presented with a beautiful loving cup. The keepsake was of huge dimensions, with decorations and engraving of the most elegant kind, and it was looked upon as a most fitting tribute to the local realtor.

ATLANTA REALTORS FIGURE IN SPORT WORLD.

With Bobby Jones and Perry Adair, of the Adair Realty & Trust company playing in the open and the southern championship golf events, and with "Hop" Owens taking a star part in the tennis world during the past ten days, the real estate profession in Atlanta was most splendidly represented in the world of sports.

Nothwithstanding that both Bobby Jones and Perry Adair, who are daily companions in the business world, were successfully challenged and lost for the time being, it is hoped, their golfing crowns, by being defeated, respectively, for the open and the southern golf championships, it has been noted that neither of them has thus far presented anything in the shape of an alibi. Both men took their medicine like true sportsmen, and both of them indicated, it has been said, that they are made of the stuff that will enable them to meet competition in business, as well as the golfing world. Both former champions have the best wishes of a large number of friends and business associates who have faith in the ability and who wish for them better luck next time.

ATLANTA'S "LEANING TOWER" BEING RAZED.

Pasesngers along Whitehall street have observed the progress of wreckers who are tearing away a building at the corner of Whitehall and Brotherton streets, which for several years has been one of the "wonders of modern Atlanta," in that it has stood firmly and resisted all shocks despite the fact that its walls were greatly out of plumb. This old frame building, leaning perceptibly toward the north, has caused remarks from thousands of people who looked for its collapse because of its leaning to the street. It has been for several years the home of one of the units of a well known chain grocery establishment, none of whose many customers or its manager seemed afraid of a collapse. The old building, which had to be literally pulled down by the wreckers, resisting stubbornly their efforts to remove its timbers, will be replaced by a larger and more modern commercial structure, it is understood, however, no definite announcements have been made with reference to the development.

PROMINENT CONCERNS LEASE WHITEHALL BUILDING.

With the completion of the large rent building, 182x200 feet of Whitehall street, which is being completed for local capitalists, signs have been placed upon the big structure announcing that it is to be occupied as soon as finished by Frank Revson & Son, large soda fount dealers, who will take a large portion of the big building, and the Austin Western Roadmaking Machinery company, taking another section. This big building, which is for office and ware rooms, is one of the largest of its kind that has been erected during the present building wave. It has three floors, giving the entire structure an enormous aggregate area. No announcements have been made regarding other parts of the building, but it is understood that negotiations are in progress for the leasing of the entire structure.

WRIGHT COMPANY COMPLETE REMOVAL.

The Wright company, largest and most important concern in the south handling kitchen equipment and furnishings for hotels, apartments and large private homes, which recently announced its lease of the big new building on Whitehall street, near McDaniel street, is said to have completely affected its removal from its former location. The new quarters of the firm are said to have been specially fitted out for its occupancy, and the interior arrangement of the building is looked upon as practically ideal for the headquarters and exhibition rooms of such a concern. The opening of the new home was celebrated reqently by a dinner given in honor of the hotel men of Georgia, who were holding their annual convention here. The building was rented through the well known realty firm of Draper-Owens company.

BROAD STREET'S IMPORTANCE AS SHOPPING CENTER.

With the announcement recently made to the effect that $30,000 will be expended on the building now occupied by Davidson-Paxon-Stokes company, in preparing the main entrance of the big department store on Broad street, and with other business announcements and changes taking place at frequent intervals, the growing importance of this thoroughfare as a leading shopping artery becomes more and more apparent to those who observe conditions in the down-town section.

Realizing the fact that the crowds have materially increased on Broad street since the opening of the Rich department store, to be augmented to a very large extent by the opening of the Kress and L. F. M. stores, and taking into consideration the greater importance of this street as a retail thoroughfares when it is eventually extended to a junction with Whitehall street. Davidson-Paxon-Stokes company declined a most advantageous proposal to remove their department store to the north side, and renewed the contract upon their present quarters. The same influences, it has been stated, decided this big firm to take advantage of both Whitehall and Broad streets by causing a handsome entrance to the store to be projected on the Broad street side. This improvement, which is to be executed by the owners of the building, it was stated, will involve the expenditure of about $30,000 and will make this one of the handsomest stores in the south.

The Constitution has many times pointed out the great increase in importance that might be expected of Broad street as the various developments along its length were completed, and it is confidently predicted that this will eventually become one of the most famous shopping streets in the country.

MORNINGSIDE TO BECOME PART OF ATLANTA.

With a committee of council giving approval to the proposal to take Morningside into the limits of the city, and with a new transportation line—the cross-town express—starting its regular service to and from that section of the city on July 1, this splendid new residence development may be said to have every advantage that could be asked for. There seems little doubt of the final action of the city council, unless unforeseen opposition develops to the incorporation of this fine residence tract.

Morningside is located along the route of Piedmont road, which is to be improved by Fulton county, to the extent of regrading, repaving and widening to a 70-foot thoroughfare. The improvements on Piedmont avenue, from the courthouse to its junction with Peachtree street, will make it one of the finest drives in the city, and it is understood that the work will begin within a short time.

MISS HORTON RETURNS TO CRAIN OFFICE.

There was a lack of joy one day recently in the office of the Crain Realty company, due to the fact that Miss Bonnie Horton, efficient and popular stenographer, failed to respond to the daily roll call. Miss Horton was at home nursing a recalcitrant molar, which gave her much pain, it was declared. A competent dental surgeon, however, repaired the tooth and Miss Horton resumed her post, much to the gratification of her many friends.

H. F. WEST MAKES BUSINESS TRIPS.

H. F. West, the prominent Atlanta realtor, made two out-of-town business trips during the last week, one to Augusta and one to Griffin. At both places he had important real estate business, it was stated.

Mr. West is not only very active in Atlanta realty matters, but is said to have clients throughout the state. He reports crop conditions fine and prospects good for continued activity in the real estate game.

CRIDER, REALTY DEALER, FORESEES FINE FUTURE.

Harry J. Crider, one of the best-known Atlanta realty dealers, who is said to have experienced a splendid run of business for several months, gives out a most optimistic note in discussing the future of real estate in this city. Taking the past few months as a criterion, and looking forward to the result of a continued increase in population, which seems certain for Atlanta, Mr. Crider does not hesitate to predict that there is yet a large volume of business to be done by the realty dealer who has the listings of the attractive kind and the enthusiasm to make a sale.

MRS. IVEY IS CHEERFUL IN OUTLOOK.

With a number of fine transactions closed during the past few weeks, and with other sales in the making, Mrs. Gussie B. Ivey, one of Atlanta's most successful realty agents, declares herself thoroughly satisfied with the prospect for business in the future.

Mrs. Ivey specializes to a large extent in finding suitable homes for people who tell her their wishes and leave the rest to her judgment and knowledge of locations and values. She is said to have a long list of satisfied clients, which is looked upon as one of the most valuable assets that can be piled up by a real estate concern.

"I love to find homes for my clients," said Mrs. Ivey, "and it gives me great pleasure of course when they are satisfied." Mrs. Ivey has not only made the question of homes a deep study in Atlanta and vicinity, but she has traveled extensively in the United States and other countries, observing homes and gathering ideas to be applied to her work.

LOGAN COMPANY REMOVES QUARTERS.

The Logan Realty & Trust corporation has removed its offices from 817-818 Atlanta Trust company building to 608-9-10 same building, according to a recent announcement. Increase of business and adding new departments made it necessary to obtain larger office space, it was stated.

A leasing department has recently been added which will specialize on central leases. Several leases have already been made by this department, among which is the leasing of a large garage building on Houston street for ten years, to be erected at once by the owner. Ground has been broken for the new building, which will be started as soon as the plans are completed.

The sales department reports continued and increasing activity in North Side acreage tracts.

W. Eberhardt, Jr., S. W. Brookhart and C. B. Barber. Mr. Steger, who has been covering the southeast for the past decade, will be in Atlanta the coming week and will call on the trade. New Highland View Apartment

The above engraving shows the beautiful new apartment recently completed at 699 Highland avenue, which is to be called the "Highland View." This fine, modern structure, which is finished and equipped in the most luxurious and convenient fashion, will be under the exclusive agency of Turman-Brown Realty and Trust company.

The Highland View contains 12 residence units, of three and four rooms. These dwellings are equipped with everything required to make them well-nigh ideal as homes for discriminating people and it is expected that the popularity of the apartment will be realized immediately. The apartment is located in a select residence section, three blocks removed from Ponce de Leon avenue, and within convenient distance of churches, schools and parks.

A representative of the Turman-Brown company, it was stated, will be at the apartment Sunday afternoon to permit interested persons to inspect the remaining apartments.

S.W. Straus Survey Shows Decline in U. S. Construction

Building activities throughout the United States are slowing up perceptibly in the vast majority of cities and towns but continuing steadily in many large cities, according to the national monthly building survey of S. W. Straus & Co., made public here yesterday.

In more than 330 cities and towns covered by the survey, May building permits and plans filed were 8 per cent ahead of May, 1923. Outside New York city the volume of permits issued was substantially the same last month as in May, 1923, the gains acquired in Chicago, Detroit, Washington, Seattle, Cincinnati, Dallas, St. Paul, Baltimore, Hartford, Newark and a number of other cities being balanced with the losses in the great mass of cities and towns.

The Pacific coast group of states showed losses of 25 per cent. The middle west and south just about broke even, while the eastern group gained 30 per cent.

Building activities in New York continued to be an outstanding feature of interest. The five boroughs reported gains in May of $25,000,000. Building plans filed in the nation's metropolis for the half-year period are now sure to pass the half-billion-dollar mark, and some observers declare that 1924 will be a billion-dollar building year in New York. These calculations are based on the report of $492,000,000 for five months, a gain of 33 per cent over the same period in 1923 and 72 per cent over 1922.

Gains in Large Cities.

The twenty-five leading building cities reported gains of $29,000,000 or 16 per cent over May, 1923, and $44,000,000 or 26 per cent over May, 1922, this showing that building operations in the larger cities of the country are still greatly in excess of any previous period.

Further softening in the prices of lumber and structural steel materials manifested itself during the month. In certain markets, notably New York and Boston, sand and gravel receded from the prices established during the previous month, but in Chicago there was an upward turn. Prices continued firm in other materials. Variations in starting material prices were relatively small, while the recessions in lumber and structural steel were more marked.

NACHMAN OPENS NEW ADVERTISING AGENCY

Announcement is made today by Herbert Nachman, formerly connected with Eastman, Scott & Co., well-known Atlanta advertising firm, that he has opened a general advertising agency at 209 Bona Allen building, and will handle only the highest type of advertising matter.

Mr. Nachman is well known in Atlanta and his many friends here will wish him well in his new undertaking.

In discussing the new agency, Mr. Nachman brought out the fact that although Atlanta has a large number of advertising agencies, comparatively few of them confine themselves strictly to newspaper advertising. He states that the new firm, under the name of Herbert Nachman, will produce for all advertisers, large or small, attractive and productive advertising.

The House Beautiful---

A BIBLE READING

Read Matt. 7:24-27.

In preparing to build what is the first thing to secure?

The land, a good foundation and a competent and reliable builder.

Ye are bought with a price.—1 Cor. 6:20.

Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it.—Psalm 127:1.

Ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone in whom the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God.—Eph. 2:20-22.

Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble: every man's work shall be made manifest.—1 Cor. 3:12.

What rooms do we find in an ordinary house?

Living room, dining room, kitchen, bedroom with a closet.

Living room: what do we see?

Pictures: a word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.—Prov. 25:11.

How many pictures have I hung on my wall today?

Portraits: In the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow and his eyes were as a flame of fire. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace. And he had in his right hand seven stars.—Rev. 1:13-16.

A virtuous woman: She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. Her clothing is silk and purple. Strength and beauty are her clothing: in her tongue is the law of kindness.—Prov. 31:10, 20, 22, 25, 26.

Music: Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and music; spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things.—Eph. 5:19, 20.

Different kinds of instruments: Praise Him with the psaltery and harp; praise Him with stringed instruments and organs; praise Him with the sound of the trumpet.

I will sing of thy power, year.—Psalm 160:3, 4.

I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning.—Psalms 59:16.

Books: A Bible. Search the Scriptures.—John 5:39.

Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments. Wealth and riches shall be in his house.—Psalms 112:1, 3.

A clock: Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.—Eph. 5:16.

Watch therefore, for ye know the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.—Matt. 25:13.

Dining room: If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me.—Rev. 3:20.

Give us day by day our daily bread.—Luke 11:3.

Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink. I am the living bread which came down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die.—John 7:37. John 6:51, 50.

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.—Prov. 15:17.

Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt.—Col. 4:6.

Whether therefore, ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—1 Cor. 10:31.

Kitchen: Not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. With good will doing service, as to the Lord and not to men.—Eph. 6:6, 7.

And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men: for ye serve the Lord Christ.—Col. 3:23, 24.

Bedroom: When thou liest down thou shalt not be afraid; yea, thou shalt lie down and thy sleep shall be sweet.—Prov. 3:24.

I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep; for thou, Lord only maketh me dwell in safety.—Psalms 4:8.

I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the Lord sustained me.—Psalms 3:5.

So He giveth His beloved sleep.—Psalm 127:2.

Closet: When thou prayest, enter into they closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father.—Matt. 6:6.

Roof: In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty.—Is. 28:5.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—2 Cor. 5:1.

Hymns: Break thou the bread of life—
Abide with me—
Book of grace, and book of glory—

A Message From Abroad.

Below is a card from Mrs. William Worth Martin, of the Ponce de Leon Baptist church, who is traveling over the battle-scarred fields of France, made sacred to us by the lives of our noble boys who fell there in defense of a world-wide justice.

"Paris, May 20, 1924.

"Just returned from a ten days' auto trip to battlefields. Reims, Soissons, Chateau Thierry. It was one of sadness, yet mingled with pleasure in that they are rebuilding homes and public highways.

"Agricultural interest is on the increase. We will now leave for England, Ireland and trip up N. Cape. On our return will stop at Denmark Sweden. Have had a pleasant stay here. Wrote you from the Holy Land; hope you received same.

"MRS. W. W. M."

Who would not be stirred to visit those battlefields? Those tragic days, when there was no church, no class distinction, just all children of Gold holding a close handclasp begging for peace. The women of our great country showed as brave, true spirit as any Spartan mother ever did. It will be recorded in the annals of time as one of the most heroic ages in the history of the world.

MRS. S. L. LEWIS.

South Atlanta District.

The south Atlanta district is composed of fifty-two Methodist churches located in nine counties, and has the distinction of having the largest church membership of any district in southern Methodism.

The Woman's Missionary society has organizations in forty of these churches, thereby contributing largely to the spiritual life of the church.

Missions are the very life of any church and the one purpose of our organization is to give the gospel to the whole world. It is impossible to give you the full program of our work. I will only tell you of our specials.

We have one missionary in Korea, one day school in China, six Bible women working in China, Japan, Korea and Mexico, eleven foreign scholarships and six home scholarships.

This secretary is beginning to realize the vastness of the territory covered, the greatness of the cause she represents, and the wonderful privilege she has in presenting the women's missionary work to the splendid women all over the district who have not had the opportunity to enter into the larger service which comes through organized effort.

The fine cooperation of the pastors has made it possible for me to organize four new societies in the past two months; for this I am profoundly grateful, as it brings our district nearer to its high aim: "An auxiliary in every church, and every woman, young person and child in the church a member."

We have endeavored to awaken a deep conscientious interest in missions and show the women the wonderful possibilities and the grave responsibilities which God has placed upon them. No woman who has found this door of opportunity and understands her obligation can sit "idle and at ease in Zion" enjoying all the blessings that Christianity has given without wanting to have a part in this great work. The Woman's Missionary society furnishes her the opportunity to work in her own community and among the neglected and needy people in her own country, and she can go to "the uttermost parts of the earth."

MRS. J. C. WHITE.
Secretary South Atlanta District.

Dime Socials Give Variety In Church Work

A change in church work is often a rest and variety is restful, although it may be only the same work done sitting down instead of standing up. So when the summer days come the women of Central Congregational church suspend weekly meetings at the church and substitute "dime socials."

These are friendship gatherings at private houses, when we learn who is going away, who has come home, if anyone is ill, and other interesting "current events," so keeping in touch with each other instead of waiting till fall to pick up the stitches. Each one at the social pays a dime and light refreshments are served. Sometimes an item of business must be talked over and acted on. The whole amount received ranges from $20 to $25, and pays our monthly pledge for the summer months to the Travelers' Aid, the Anti-Tuberculosis association and the Red Cross. The meetings are held fortnightly, that is, on every other Tuesday. For several years this has been our custom and we do not tire of it. Those who do not attend pay a dime as if present, so it is a fair arrangement on a cash basis.

MRS. D. I. CARSON.

Briefly Told

Miss Bertha Tucker, missionary to Korea, is home on furlough. She is a North Georgia girl, going from Crawfordville 13 years ago to serve her church in Korea. Park Street Woman's Missionary society has the privilege of contributing to her support not only with money, but with their love and prayers.

Mrs. J. C. White has returned from Waleska, where she attended the Marietta district meeting. Mrs. Awtry, the district secretary, had a fine program and large attendance, every society being represented.

MISSION STUDY.

Looking forward to a successful mission study training school to be held at the Baptist tabernacle, June 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, under the auspices of the W. M. U. of the Atlanta Baptist association, Mrs. W. A. Hartman, superintendent; Mrs. C. W. King, mission study chairman, reminds our women that all classes begin each morning at 10:30 and continue until 12 m.

Mrs. J. McF. Gaston, of Laichow-Fu, China, was among the list of foreign missionaries so cordially welcomed in Atlanta during the recent southern W. M. U. meetings. Dr. and Mrs. Gaston have many friends in Atlanta, having lived among us before going to China to take charge of the medical work in the hospital at Laichow-Fu. Dr. and Mrs. Gaston sailed from Seattle, Wash., on June 13, to return to their work, after a furlough spent with relatives in Georgia and Virginia. Mrs. Gaston is not only an efficient missionary, but an authoress as well.

WOMEN APPOINTED.

It is a significant fact that when the Southern Baptists appointed their committee on the "Future Program," five women were named as members of the committee. Among them was Miss Laura Lee Patrick, corresponding secretary-treasurer of the W. M. U. of Georgia, who met this committee June 4 in Nashville, Tenn. The other four women representatives were Mrs. W. C. James and Miss Kathleen Mallory, president and corresponding secretary, respectively, of the Southern Baptist W. M. U.; Mrs. Janie Cree Bose, of Kentucky, and Mrs. B. K. Spooner, of Oklahoma.

Having received a cordial invitation to attend the sixth district rally of the Flynt River association, which took place June 10, at Williamson, Ga., Atlanta women thus honored regretted their inability to attend. It would have been a delight to meet the good women of Flynt River under the direction of the secretary, Mrs. R. H. Strickland, of Concord, and to have heard the addresses by Mrs. Idus Robertson, of Manchester, vice president of the W. M. U. division; Mrs. J. P. Nichols, of Griffin, associational superintendent, and others whose names appear on the attractive program.

PROCESSIONAL CROSS.

A handsome processional cross has been presented to St. John's church (Rev. H. Scott-Smith, vicar), Bainbridge, Ga., by Mrs. D. C. Gurley and Mr. Ramsey, in memory of their mother, Mrs. Helen Tonge Ramsey, who was a devoted worker in the mission and the church school. The cross is of brass, mounted on an oak staff and bears a suitable inscription.

ATLANTA WOMAN TRUSTEE.

Mrs. M. E. Tolly, graduate of Wesleyan college, and superintendent of children's work in the North Georgia conference, M. E. Church, South, is one of the three women recently elected as trustees of Wesleyan college, Macon, Ga. Mrs. Walter Lamar, of Macon, and Miss Lucy Lester, of Thomasville, were the other two women to be so honored.

WORLD-WIDE FEDERATION.

The summer conference at Vassar college which is being held this week for the purpose of discussing plans for organizing a world-wide federation of Christian women will assemble prominent women from all over the states. North Georgia will be ably represented by Mrs. Luke G. Johnson, who is chairman of the woman's division of the board of missions of the M. E. Church, South.

CONVENTION RECORDS AVAILABLE.

The record of the women's national convention for law enforcement, held in Washington city in April—which, incidentally, was attended by leading women from all the church organizations in the United States—is now available and can be had by writing to the National Committee for Law Enforcement, 600 Lexington avenue, New York City (price 10c). This account of the convention, with all of the speeches that were made there by great men and women from all over the nation, is a most desirable booklet to have and will prove interesting reading.

PERSHING AND BOARD STUDY MEMORIAL PLANS

New York, June 14.—General John J. Pershing today sailed for France with a committee, of which he is chairman, commissioned by congress to study plans for memorials to Americans killed in the war.

Accompanying him were Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania; Representative John Phillip Hill, of Maryland; Thomas Miller, property custodian; Major A. G. Woodside, Colonel J. S. Mackey and Mrs. Frederick W. Bentley.

Publicity in Gospel Work

Mrs. C. S. Strong, Murrayville, Ga., superintendent of literature and publicity Woman's Missionary society, North Georgia conference Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

BY MRS. C. S. STRONG.

To give the gospel, the glorious glad tidings of the world's Redeemer, the gospel in program and pageant, the gospel in prayer and petition, the gospel in press and poster is the purpose of publicity.

The Woman's Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by means of literature sends the gospel in song and story, in simplicity and sincerity to those in sunshine or in shadow.

Superintendents of publicity in all our auxiliaries, working through a perfect organization, are taking this literature even to the last woman in "backwoodsdom," making of her a world citizen and enlisting her prayers and sympathy for her heathen sisters around the world.

Through the courtesy of the editors of the newspapers of north Georgia many columns of missionary news are printed weekly, reaching thousands of readers, many of whom doubtless gain their first missionary information through the columns of the daily press. It is only when we are informed that we are inspired. People who could never otherwise know of the dire need of the human race and of the activities of the church to meet this need are sometimes arrested by a pointed paragraph in the secular papers. The eyegate is much more readily entered than the ear-gate. Many will look when they will not listen.

Auxiliary superintendents of publicity present facts and features of the woman's missionary work at the preachin gservice, at the prayer meeting, at the Sunday school and at regular meetings of the societies.

There is no organization either secular or religious that is using a more attractive and adequate literature than the Woman's Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The best brain and heart of her membership produce it, and money is not spared to make it both beautiful and instructive. Most of it is free for the asking.

From this faithful sowing of missionary messages, there will surely come a harvest.

FOUR ALIENISTS EXAMINE YOUTHS TO TEST SANITY

Chicago, June 14.—More alienists appeared today at the county jail to examine Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb, millionaires' sons and confessed kidnapers and slayers of 13-year-old Robert Franks. Four alienists went to the jail today and spent several hours examining the youths as a part of the plan of the defense to prove them insane.

The youths greeted the doctors warmly, but seemed amused by the mysterious equipment which the doctors spread out in the death cell.

While the defense is busy building up its case, the state is preparing to batter it down, and one assistant state's attorney has been assigned to have complete charge of the legal barrier which the state hopes to construct to oppose the testimony of alienists for the defense. The state has indicated that its main contention will be that the youths were capable of knowing right from wrong at the time the slaying occurred.

State Superintendent of Schools N. H. Ballard has appointed teachers who will be in charge of the session. Superintendent Elrod states that he has received a number of applications from students, and it is thought that the dormitories will be well filled. A general course of study will be given, and students also will be coached for higher grades.

Atlanta Y. W. C. A. Fills Large Place In Life of City

It is generally conceded that the Young Women's Christian association fills a place of much importance in every large community and many are aware that this Christian institution is of inestimable value to Atlanta; but only those who get beneath the surface and realize the actual daily problems with which it deals, can appreciate just what a wonderful asset it is in the religious and civic life of the city.

There came to me the thought as case after case was presented to me, what a weight of anxiety must be lifted from the hearts of those back home in some quiet rural district, when it is known that the young daughter, seeking the larger opportunity offered by Atlanta, has found herself safely anchored through the help of this friendly service.

It became evident at once that between Mrs. E. B. Hume, of the room registry com ittee and the Travelers' Aid, with Mrs. Payne, as the efficient head, a fine spirit of cooperation must exist. Not infrequently both are called even at the midnight hour, for the safeguarding of some belated girl arrival in the city, or for the protecting of others as they make a change of trains. Only those who give a serious thought to these problems of youth and the big city, with all the woe that might easily become involved, can realize what the joining of these helpful hands must mean.

A Typical Case.

Many cases come before me as I write, one of which is that of a young girl threatened with pellagra and resultant blindness. She had come from a rural community, out of a family of ten children, to make her own way in the city. Soon she was stricken, but with Spartan courage fought on to maintain her independence. The condition of her health and her mind was found to be such, however, as could only be restored by the proper sort of diet and this her own slender means could not afford. Through the "Y. W." a place was found for her to live, and with the wholesome daily lunches furnished there, she is regaining her health and working cheerfully.

Another especially sad case is that of a young woman, also threatened with blindness, who found it necessary to give up her work as a typist. The conditions under which she was forced to live by reason of her slender purse, were most unimaginable. Having been reared in an atmosphere of refinement such a situation as she found herself in seemed almost intolerable. With resources well nigh exhausted from having put a younger sister through school and courageously bearing other financial burdens, she found herself facing possible blindness. It was then her fortitude gave way, and declaring the game not to be "worth the candle," she contemplated self-destruction. In this crisis she reached out and touched the friendly hand of the Young Women's Christian association. At once a diligent search for a home was made by those interested in her case, and many fervent prayers were offered. Soon there came an answer to the prayers when the phone in the registry office rang with an inquiry for a young woman of refinement who might take the place of an absent member of the household, who had gone to live in a distant city.

No words of appreciation would be complete without especial mention of those who labor so tirelessly and so devotedly everyday to make the Young Women's Christian association all that the name implies and to further its continued success on many lines.

The whole-hearted consideration to be found on all sides, as one goes from one department to another, likewise extends to those who serve in their various capacities in the dining room and kitchen, nor could one ever forget the singing of those beautiful negro spirituals as rendered by the colored help on the occasion of the annual meeting.

Facts and Figures Given On Woman's Missionary Work

BY MRS. B. D. GRAY.

In October, 1800, the first woman's missionary organization was formed by Baptists and Congregationalists, with Mary Webb, a Baptist, as secretary and treasurer.

In 1802 Baptist women organized a "Home Mission society" for the "spread of evangelical truth in the United States."

Eighteen and nineteen marks the date of the first united organization of woman's work in the Methodist church. In 1834 the "First General Missionary society," a society for the promotion of female education in the east," was formed in England through efforts of Dr. David Abeel, one of the earliest missionaries to China.

Dr. Abeel visited America in 1836 hoping to inaugurate a similar organization, but not until 1861 did the seed bring forth fruit.

Then a "Woman's Union Missionary society" was inaugurated in the same parlor where, twenty-five years before, the subject had been presented.

Only seven years were needed to prove that the work was too great for inter-denominational effort.

Congregational women first formed a separate organization, followed by northern Methodist women.

The Baptist women of the north in 1881 formed in Boston the Woman's Baptist Foreign Mission society. Six years later (1887) in Chicago was formed a Woman's Baptist Home Mission society. Other organizations in other denominations followed rapidly. Organized effort had been proven to be a plan by which strength is amassed and the individual has the advantage of working with all the momentum given by the united body.

Organized In 1888.

Southern Baptist women were among the most conservative. They hesitated to advance until fully assured that it was indeed the Master's voice bidding them "Go Forward." Though local societies and state central committees had long been in existence and doing great good, it was not until 1888 that the Woman's Missionary Union, auxiliary to the Southern Baptist convention, our general organization, was formed.

A carcful review of all organized work of women in all evangelical churches during the past forty or fifty years challenges the admiration of the Christian world and increases appreciation of how women have been helpers in God's Kingdom and convinces an unbelieving world that God has conferred a high honor upon woman in endowing her with the will and power to serve lost humanity

The great Dr. Josiah Strong gave voice to these words a quarter of a century ago: "A foothold has been secured, a fulcrum found, the gospel lever put in place; but the future will see the wonderful uplift." Of home missions this same great man wrote: "The wondrous facts of American history are the mighty alphabet with which God writes His prophecies."

It seems that with infinite wisdom and skill He is training the Anglo-Saxon race for an hour to come in the world's history." These words written in 1900 came to fulfillment in 1917-1918 in the world war.

During the past year the "Woman's Missionary union," auxiliary to the Southern Baptist convention reported a total of 22,236 missionary societies, of which number 11,711 are young people's organizations.

Seventeen thousand and ninety-nine mission study classes were conducted by these organized societies.

Mrs. W. C. Lowndes, treasurer of this Woman's Missionary union, gave the information during the recent convention in Atlanta, that since 1888, the date of organization, the Woman's Missionary union had given in these thirty-six years $19,914,000 to missions and education.

Altars Reestablished.

We must not forget that this stupendous achievement of our organized women has been made possible because for generations back the south has been peopled with God-fearing, God-serving mothers and fathers, who taught their children and likewise their slaves reverence and obedience. These ante-bellum women were cultured, rich, godly and reigning queens in their own homes.

At the close of the war in 1865 the women of the south helped to reestablish the altars in homes and churches; organized Sunday schools, Ladies' Aid scoieties, helped to pay pastors' salaries, held cottage prayer-meetings; convenanted together to fast and pray for the coming of the new day when the knowledge of the Lord would fill the whole earth. Such faith, vision and importunate supplication antedated all organizations of W. M. U.'s, B. Y. P. U.'s, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavors and even Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A. organizations.

Let us thank God reverently for those great and glorious women who put holy things first in their lives, and by their individual greatness in personal sacrifice and holy aspirations, helped to bring on this great day of organized church activities.

My own precious mother, so lately translated to the glorious eternity awaiting her, said to me a few years ago: "Yes, daughter, I am thrilled by all that organized women are accomplishing in God's Kingdom; but in the hurry of achievement your younger women are in danger of neglecting the source of our power in the long ago, when we gave as individuals. Beware of placing Service in the place of Worship." In other words: "Do not be so busy serving the Master that you neglect the more important duty of communing daily with the Heavenly Father. Have a time set apart and hold inviolate for meditation and prayer." "Spiritual things are spiritually discerned" and come not except by close and constant study of God's Holy Word. And remember always that worldly pleasures cloy the soul and prevent its holy aspirations after God."

Mr. Gray in an early issue will give a pen portrait of two individual women of the past who helped make possible the present growth of Christianity, namely, Mrs. J. Lawrence Smith, of Louisville, Ky., and Mrs. Joseph E. Brown, the wife of the war governor of Georgia.

AFTER AN OPERATION

Mrs. Wilke Couldn't Get Back Her Strength Until She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rochester, Minn.—"I had a very serious operation and it seemed as if I could not get my health back after it. I suffered with pain almost constantly. My sister came to help take care of me, and she was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for nervousness and a run-down condition. She had me try some of it, and in a very few days' time I began to feel better. In two weeks I hardly knew myself and after taking a couple of bottles more I was up and helping around, and now I am strong and healthy again and am still taking it. It is a pleasure for me to write this to you, and I hope that many other women who are suffering like I was will find out about your medicine. I will give any information I possibly can." — Mrs. JAMES WILKE, 933 E. Center Street, Rochester, Minnesota.

Remember, the Vegetable Compound has a record of fifty years of success among American women.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

HOW EXCELLENT is thy loving-kindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shall make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.—Psalm 36:7, 8.

WHAT GOOD ROADS MEAN.

What interest has the small farmer, tenant or laborer living in the remote rural districts in the development of good roads in his community? This is a question often asked and if such a citizen happens not to own a car he may readily answer it for himself by saying that he is not interested in the building of good roads. "Any old road, or no road, is good enough for me," is the way he is likely to put it. And here is the budding point of much of the opposition to bond issues or any kind of taxation for road purposes.

"My granddaddy lived here, and my daddy before me. They got along with the roads or the trails as the case may be, and I can do the same. I have no car. I can walk or ride horseback wherever I want to go. I am opposed to being taxed to build roads for the city fellows to roll around over." This is the viewpoint of many small taxpayers—and citizens who are not taxpayers as for that matter—on one of the most vital and far-reaching movements of modern times.

It requires but slight consideration to show that the poorest and most isolated person living in any community has a most important interest—one which will deeply affect his future welfare—in the building of good roads within reach of his home.

Formerly every community had its physician. The old-time country doctors rode horseback with medicines in their saddlebags over the ragged roads and narrow trails, and if they could not ride they walked. They reached their patients in some way and gave such measure of relief to suffering as their means allowed. They were the heroic pioneers in a great cause, but their day has passed forever.

The physicians of the future will be highly trained men who have spent something like eight years in hard and exhaustive study, and who have invested a large sum of money in obtaining an education—the education which the law now requires they must have before they can even offer to practice medicine. Will these young men—highly trained, with years of work and thousands of dollars invested in an education—go out to the crossroads communities and settle down for life?

They will not!

Then who is going to look after the health and physical welfare of the remote citizen and his wife and children? They will need the attention of the physician just as urgently as they have ever needed him in the past. But they will not find him at the nearby country store. He will be located in the county seat or some other town which is large enough to support a hospital equipped to render reasonably effective service. Most of the medical practice of the future will be done in these hospitals. But what about the fellow who lives on some road over which a car cannot be driven and who needs emergency attention in the night? If he lives on a good road the hospital doctors can go to him easily and quickly, and his needs can be attended to.

The rural dweller is also interested in getting his children to school. The movement everywhere is towards consolidation of the scattered country schools. Consolidation brings better buildings, more and better equipped teachers and more satisfactory results. In order to reach the consolidated schools of the future the child must be in easy reach of a good road. There are many other ways in which the rural dweller, no matter how remote, is deeply interested in the development of good roads in reach of his home, even if he should never have anything to sell.

He needs the good road much more than the city dweller, for the city man can reach his place of business, obtain the things he needs, go to church, and his children can go to school—in short, he can carry on his entire life program without finding it necessary to go any considerable distance from home.

Thus it will appear that the rural citizen needs good roads even more than the dweller in the town, and yet the cost of obtaining these good roads falls much lighter on the rural citizen than on the town taxpayer.

In any ample road building program financed by a bond issue or otherwise, by far the larger part of the burden would fall on the towns and the cities, and, as we have seen, the benefits would accrue in large measure to the rural population.

TREND OF THE MARKET.

Low money rates which have brought some good buying into the market are expected to exert a great deal of influence for an extended time, in the opinion of a number of financial leaders. The effect of these rates has already been seen in high-grade issues, which even in a most irregular market have come through the recent few days of trading considerably higher.

The market in stocks, which for some time stayed in a strictly trading area, seems to be pushing out of this area, and although the advance can hardly be said to be one of extended or long duration, still there are many who believe that stocks bought on any slight recession can safely be held for advances in the near future.

The republican convention is now over and traders in general seem to be satisfied with those who will carry the standards of the party, and now all eyes in the financial world are trained on the coming democratic convention in New York.

A leading financial writer who for the past few weeks has been decidedly pessimistic has suddenly changed and now voices the opinion that business conditions "are not as bad as they seemed." This was a frank expression from a man whose opinions on conditions are watched closely.

Credit continues to be good, and all that remains is to bring about a complete restoration of public confidence which for the past six months has been sadly lacking.

That this restoration has now started is plainly evident from the new buying that has come into the market during the past week.

IDLENESS AND CRIME.

The trial of Frank McDowell at Clearwater, Fla., focused intense interest on this young man.

Parents who have children of their own and people who are interested from the wider view of the common good are asking this question, "What is the matter with this boy?"

The psychology of the criminal is being studied more intensely now than ever before in the history of the world and the trials for crimes in Florida and Illinois furnish new and striking material. The advance in criminology during recent years has made it possible to classify the criminal character to an extent not dreamed of a generation ago. One of the startling things brought out by investigations along this line is the fact that a large number of the criminals are mere boys. It is reported upon the authority of a veteran detective that ninety per cent of the hold-up men operating in the large cities of the country are under thirty and many in their teens. The recklessness of youth, lack of experience in the ways of the world, the spirit of adventure and the lack of ability to see ahead and count the cost may in some degree account for the excess of young criminals, but in the case of McDowell and the Chicago youths a similar mental state is startlingly apparent. It is a lack of comprehension of moral values and the absence of a sense of responsibility.

It seems strange that young men should engage in extensive courses of study—should make brilliant records in college—should mix with people of normal human instincts, and even of intellectual and spiritual culture and refinement, and yet remain lacking in that sense of responsibility upon which organized society depends. The cause of this mental and spiritual defect is hard to determine.

In the case of McDowell, persons who knew him well during his residence in Decatur say that he did not appear to be a normal boy. He seemed rather to be abnormal in many ways—abnormally proud, abnormally bright, abnormally indolent, abnormally conceited, abnormally retiring and selfish.

According to his neighbors he suffered for lack of social contact with persons of his own age. His lack of familiarity with other young people gave him an exaggerated idea of his own abilities. He suffered, they say, for lack of spiritual and moral training. Extensive reading of radical philosophies and materialistic theories, without the help of mature instruction, gave him the idea that religion and moral responsibility are mere fancies; and he suffered, according to his neighbors, for lack of work.

Lack of work—lack of proper employment for the mind and hand—may be the cause of much of the crime and apparent degeneracy we hear so much about.

The exuberant spirit of youth seeks an outlet. It will find one. Hard work has kept many a man and boy in the straight and narrow path which leads not only to usefulness and prosperity, but to safety.

VEGETABLE WEALTH.

According to a news report furnished by G. B. Eunice, agricultural development agent of the A., B. & A. railroad, it will require 600 cars to handle this year's merchantable vegetable crops that are beginning to move to the east from practically six counties along the lines of that road, all south of Cordele.

These crops include tomatoes, cucumbers, beans, potatoes, cantaloupes, etc. The production is reported as good, the marketable qualities good, and under vastly improved systems of grading, packing and distributing there is every good reason to believe that the net prices will be satisfactory to the farmers.

When we think of 600 cars of vegetables from only six out of 160 counties, most of which are supplementary crops to other staple commodities, such as cotton and grain; when we think of what the peach crop will bring into Georgia this year; what the melon crop will bring in later; what the peanut crop will be; what will be the value of the hay crop that is actually sold, not taking into account the even greater value of the hay that is fed to stock and converted as pasturage into meat; when we think of the growing value each year of the grain crops in Georgia, and then the greatest of all in gross money value, the cotton crop; when we think of the beef and hog and poultry products that are grown in Georgia; when we think of all these things, we wonder what is the matter with Georgia, with her vast present resources and her far vaster opportunities.

There is no questioning the fact that Georgia is becoming stronger every day in agricultural wealth. It lags in its manufacturing progress. It is letting its raw products go into other states for the processes of finishing. It is not keeping up with the procession in road development and in schools and in the maintenance of state institutions. It is not as alert to its advantages as less favored states. And a low order of politics is the reason for it all.

The A., B. & A. is to be congratulated for the force it is putting behind agricultural development along its line. Georgia has every opportunity to regain the place once occupied—that of Empire State of the South—if the politicians will let the pendulum of economics swing to a plumb.

OLD BROTHER CROW.

Recent agitation among the farmers of Georgia and other states against Old Brother Crow has brought that sable gentleman into the limelight.

The crow has long held an unenviable position in birdland. He has been charged with pulling up green corn, robbing the nests of other birds and farm poultry—destroying both eggs and young—making an outrageous racket and other things which are not appreciated by his human neighbors, and it has therefore been deemed proper and advisable to make war on Old Brother Crow with guns, poison and traps. But recently there was a concerted movement among the farmers of a nearby county to exterminate the crow family, and it was urged in support of this crusade that the crows not only pulled up the young corn, punctured the growing melons, robbed the hens' nests, but that they were destroying the eggs and young of other birds, and therefore as a means of saving the song birds the crows should be killed.

Old Brother Crow, however, has found a friend in the person of E. R. Kalmbach, assistant biologist of the department of agriculture. He comes forward with the statement that the crow is not altogether bad. In a pamphlet recently issued Mr. Kalmbach says that while the crow does some damage he also does much good and his extermination would therefore be an agricultural calamity.

It is pointed out that the crow is a ground feeder and therefore eats much scattered corn, peas and other small grain as he may find lying in the fields after the farmer has gathered his crop, but at other seasons of the year his food consists mainly of bugs, insects, beetles and pestiferous seeds. It is estimated that one-fifth of the crow's food is made up of bugs and other pests which are injurious to the farmer's crops.

Examinations made by the biological survey show that the crow eats vast quantities of such insects and farm pests as the May beetle and their larvae, the white grubs, click beetles, weevils of various kinds, grasshoppers and other forms of small life which are highly detrimental to the farmers and which extract from the produce of his land a yearly toll of many millions of dollars.

It is admitted by Mr. Kalmbach that the crow has numerous faults and he states that it would be a mistake to extend to this unpopular bird absolute protection, but he says that its extermination would result in taking away a most effective enemy of a vast army of insect pests.

If crows should become so abundant in any community that they seem to be collecting for a livelihood more than is due them for the good services they render, then it is deemed advisable to reduce them to proper numbers, but on the other hand if they are not making costly inroads on the crops and poultry yards it is considered the better course to allow them to exist unmolested.

HOW WRITERS WORK.

The announcement that Georges Clemenceau is engaged in writing a ten-volume book upon which he works from 11 at night until 4 in the morning serves to direct attention to the way in which other writers do their work.

Few literary workers seem to have found similar conditions favorable to their best efforts. Some have found that they must have the quietude of the night—like Clemenceau, whose advanced age would suggest the need of all possible restful sleep; others have found that they required the detachment of the country and the sense of repose which isolation brings—as, for instance, Mrs. Cora Harris. Others like Charles Dickens and O. Henry needed the stimulation which comes from intimate contact with humanity—crowded, throbbing streets and jostling, hurrying crowds.

During the past generation writing has become largely a trade to which commonplace and prosaic methods are applied. Many American writers, known for their voluminous production, employ secretaries and have regular hours of work every day very much after the manner of the lawyer, carpenter or office manager. Many of these writers have found that they can do their best work in the early mornings. Among these may be mentioned Booth Tarkington, William Allen White, James Branch Cabell and scores of others whose names are familiar to the present-day reading public.

Escape from annoying disturbances and the finding of helpful surroundings has ever constituted the supreme problem in the lives of many writers. And in this quest the Latins, as well as others, have sought the repose of the night.

It was said of Balzac that he went to bed at 8, after a very light dinner, got up and began writing at 2 and kept this up at a furious pace till 6. Then he took a bath which lasted an hour. At 8 he drank a cup of coffee without sugar, then went back to his writing, which he kept up uninterruptedly till noon, when he breakfasted on two boiled eggs and a cup of coffee without sugar. He went back to work at 1 o'clock and kept this up until 6. This was a very strenuous program and Balzac soon paid the price with his life.

In contrast with the high pressure methods of Balzac, that sedate and self-contained Englishman, Anthony Trollope, is said to have made a regular rule of writing 800 words the first thing after breakfast every morning—day in and day out, Sundays included, for many years, and the result of this plodding method was that he left behind a vast amount of accomplished work.

The problem with the writer, as with the creative worker in any line, is concentration. Few are able to secure this in the midst of noises, interruptions and distractions. It is said of John Burroughs that he could lay aside all business cares and devote himself to writing just as he might put off his coat, and Lafcadio Hearn could write the most remarkable English in the press-room of a big daily newspaper while the roar of the machinery fairly shook the building. It will thus be seen that all people are not alike. What is food for one is poison for the other, as the saying goes.

As the accomplishment of anything that is worth while in every line of creative work requires concentration, it is therefore apparent that concentration must be secured at whatever cost. The paramount problem which confronts the writer, the laboratory worker, the research investigator, the business director, everywhere would seem to be securing conditions which will permit clear and unbroken thinking. Whatever stands in the way of this must be ruthlessly cut off and cast away; whatever is helpful must be seized upon and treasured as fine gold.

When the college youth comes home for the summer vacation he'll have to use plain American when swearing at the Georgia mule, for that animal is not great on Greek, and kicks at all highfalutin' phrases.

In May, the popular verdict was, "It's cold as h—l;" and in June, "It's hot as the same."

Taxation—A Question of Character

"Nothing is certain except taxes and death," is an ancient proverb which expresses an almost universal attitude toward the payment of taxes. Indeed, we would doubt the sincerity or the sanity of the man who would claim that he cheerfully meets this annual governmental toll. At best it is considered a necessary evil. But it does seem a profound pity that this is true. One is forced to believe that there must be something radically wrong, not merely in the distribution or method of the tax, but in the whole spirit of the system, when we find that it is so universally irksome to the citizen.

It is not difficult to understand the citizen without his having any how this attitude was born. In the olden days the tax was imposed upon voice in its imposition. The government was some form of tyranny, sometimes benevolent, oftener selfish and cruel. The tax was money forcibly taken from the people for purposes alien to their interests. The long fight for democracy was the fight against "taxation without representation;" so democracy won its real fight when the people gained the right to tax themselves for their own welfare.

Rights and Duties.

Just here is the real pity of it all. Men still think of government as some alien power that reaches down into the pockets of the citizen and takes his money for its own purposes. So that men, who are meticulously honest in their dealings with one another, are shameless about dodging taxes, and evading their obligations to the government. Can it be possible that we have gained the form of democracy in government, but have not yet come into the consciousness of democracy? Certainly one would feel very different about paying a tax if he could feel that he was buying some benefit for himself and his neighbors. I have faith enough in our citizenship to believe that even without the consciousness of self-interest, he would gladly pay the tax if he felt that it was for the general welfare of his community or nation.

Of course, I know the instant reply of the average taxpayer is that the government is in the hands of politicians, or selfish interests, and that taxes are unjustly distributed, and the money dishonestly or unwisely expended. Just here is the preacher's first point. The right of self-taxation is of the very essence of democracy. Theoretically, the government is the people. Along with the privilege of self-government goes the responsibility to take whatever time or trouble is necessary to participate in the government. Is it not true that in well nigh every municipality the average business man is so immersed in his own profit-making business that he knows nothing, and cares nothing, about his city or state government until a tax bill which touches his private interests is proposed? I insist that the character of a people must be judged as much by what they fail to do, as by what they do. It is a pertinent question, whether a man who has failed to take his part in public interests, helping to shape public opinion and to cast his ballot in the civic elections, has any right to protest against any tax whatsoever which may be proposed.

This leads me to say that the character of a city must be judged, not by the individual acts or gifts of its citizens, but by its corporate acts—that which all the people do together. A building, a monument, an institution, may be a gift of some one man to the community, and thus is only an expression of his character. On the other hand, your municipal schools, hospitals, streets and parks, tell the story of what the people of the city are willing to pay for the general welfare. Nowhere can the character of an individual be better tested than by what he buys with his money. So, the character of a community is best tested by what it will voluntarily tax itself to buy.

Atlanta is facing in a very acute form this tax question, and I insist that it is a question of character. We haven't money enough to provide an adequate common school education for all of our children. We are facing the tragic situation next fall of the possibility of closing the schools for two months and, even if we should provide for their opening, of having to shut the door in the faces of thousands of boys and girls.

A Question of Emphasis.

Now, it seems to me that there are two questions involved which should be kept very clearly separated. One has to do with the wisdom, or unwisdom, of the expenditure of school funds, and the general management of school affairs in the past. That is a question for legitimate public discussion. Involved in it is the future policy of the schools. The amount of money which is needed, the manner in which it should be raised and expended, are also legitimate questions for debate. They should be discussed with earnestness and intelligence. But there is the other question, on which there should be no difference of opinion whatsoever. That is the question whether every child of school age in the city of Atlanta should have a fair chance for an education? No matter what blunders or mistakes, or even crimes, may have been committed in the past management of school funds, the boys and girls of today must not be called upon to pay the penalty of that past. These mistakes of the past must be corrected by the citizenship of today, and the wrongs of yesterday must be righted, not at the expense of our children, but at the expense of the citizenship of Atlanta.

The question before us is one of emphasis, which involves our character. Instead of the evangel, which has been declared with so much fervor, for lower taxes, let us preach first the gospel, an education for every child. After that we will have the right, and the duty, to make the most intelligent and rigorous examination of our methods of taxation and expenditure.

THE WORLD'S WINDOW

Lieutenant Dennis O'Leary, D. S. O.

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN

Irish to the core of him, refined and lovable. With blue eyes of marvelous depth; cool, serene and luminous like a mountain lake. Poesy and song in the soul of him, ever ready to burst forth like a spring of living water. Kind and cheerful, "flush" or "broke." A gloom dispelled by nature, with a heart as pure as the air of a clear morning on the Irish moors. Always willing to tote an extra pack for a straggler with sore feet, never without an extra biscuit in his knapsack or a wilted cigarette in his trousers pocket. A bonnie little fetcher. Aye, and a fetcher with a bonnie smile. A giant of strength, who shouted his commands so that the last rank could hear them. A song leader on the march and a story teller in the dug-out. But the heart of that Irishman. As big as the hills of Killarney and his human love as tender and soft as a mother's. Did he not sit in a shell hole all night with a mortally wounded Bavarian, reading prayers and saying his beads—in Gaelic? Did he not stay until dawn caught him there in No Man's Land, closing the eyes of an enemy and wiping tears from his own eyes when he stumbled into the line?

* * * *

But it is eight years ago today that we buried Lieutenant Dennis O'Leary in a little village on the Somme. Eight years ago that a little column of soldiers marched slowly bearing him wrapped in a green flag, while the bells of the old church were tolling for the dead and an Irish piper skirled the "Lament," heard of yore in Armagh and Inniskillen weher Irish kings were laid to rest. He died as he lived, for his friends. A hand grenade, sputtering and smoking, fell in the trench and he covered it with his body, yelling warnings at the top of his voice, while the thing exploded with a snarl and doubled him up, writhing and groaning with a hundred wounds.

* * * *

Why think back of that war? so they ask us. Why talk about it? Why dwell on the misery and the craziness of it? Still to twenty million young men it was the supreme experience of their lives. A period in which they saw misery and hardship untold, but also learned human love, and kindness, and friendship and learned to play the game. So today we think back of Denny O'Leary. Not Denny the soldier in a uniform, but Denny the Irish poet, who hated war and bloodshed and who loved little children, who was enraptured by the music of the waves, the murmur of bees, the perfume of flowers and the love-note of a woodthrush.

We marched into the line one cold night. And the regiment fell blue. It poured rain and the ground was slippery. Men stumbled and staggered, knocking against each other. Equipment rattled, there were smothered oaths. Now and again a warning was passed along. "Hole to the right; watch your step!" And then forward again. Soggy, sucking mud in places. Further down slush and water knee-deep. Overhead a solitary star shell. The monotonous tap, pat-tap, tap of machine guns. Artilery roaring far behind, throwing a red flare against the black lead of the sky. Gloom of heaven and gloom of earth. Men crawling along, swearing, blaspheming, stamping, cold, benumbed, tired, loaded down. Ah at once a halt. A halt in the mud. A voice from the rear. "What in hell is the hold-up?" That's the colonel's voice, rasping and angry, care-worn and anxious. But from the guides in front comes the answer. A voice of clear, glorious music with an Irish brogue singing the old song:

'And I came upon a river, and I could not get across;
Sing Polly Wolly Doodle all the day."

Somebody laughs. That laugh is contagious. It's the reaction against the pent-up misery. Everybody laughs. No more curses that night. A ray of light has come. There are jokes and optimism prevails. Denny has restored the morale. Denny, with his Irish voice.

* * * *

Now back in rest Denny was an uproarious fellow. Even wanting to see the Protestant chaplain. Going to convert him. "Going to see that poor heretic," he would say, and "dispute the law and the prophets with the man." And the chaplain glad to see Denny. Ready for his banter and ready for his questions. "Now when are ye going to vote for the pope, your reverence?" and questions of that kind. Far into the night. Getting eloquent over Irish history, telling unbelievable stories of ancient Celtic heroes, incredible legends of weird ghosts, or rapparees, of specters riding on the moors by night with Count O'Hanlon. "It's the Irish who save the empire for them. It's the boys of Ulster and Munser and Connaught that do the dying for the ungrateful English," Denny would say, and forthwith he would start a song about some colleen, whose "face was fairer than dawn, and whose lips than honey much sweeter." And at times the religious question would flare up and threaten a rupture in the regiment's good relations. Heated disputants, chaplain and Denny, but shaking hands thereafter. Good friends till the end.

* * * *

For it was Denny, by the way, who scrambled over the top alone into the dead of night, to carry on his back the wounded chaplain, who had been ministering to one of his own flock. It was Denny who scolded him for his daring and told him to stay at headquarters for "good preachers are rare and they'll need you back home when ye get back." And it was the Protestant chaplain who recited the Lord's Prayer with Denny when that hand grenade had exploded and he went to take position in the ranks of unseen hosts.

* * * *

Ten days we spent on the Riviera, looking at the blue Mediterranean. Ten days of happy, carefree lounging and smoking and eating. Denny swore that he could see Ireland through the morning mists across the sea, and when told that it might possibly be Corsica but never Ireland, he "straffed" at our protests. "You fellows have niver a bit of imagination. I say it's Ireland, and it does me good. If ye leave me alone for just a minute I'll be smelling the corn beef and cabbage wafting over to me from yon island," so was his reply.

* * * *

Denny was decorated by a general and he sent the medal home to that colleen telling her to have it made into a brooch. He wanted to write a letter to King George, dedicating one of his poems and asking him to be lenient with the "rebels of Ireland, for their heart was good," even if the king did not know it. But we persuaded him to leave the king out of it. And so he advised his friends at Cork that as soon as he had the war settled for the English he "would come back home and chase the sassanaugh back to their own place."

* * * *

Denny was shivering with the cold. Somebody offered him rum. And he drank of it greedily. But his chill continued, for there was a flurry of snow and the ground was frozen. We had lost Lieutenant Charles Beauguarde during the night on patrol. The colonel, reading a dispatch from H. Q. and swearing over "the nonsense of the thing," looked at Denny. "Why don't you put on your overcoat, Denny?" And then came the amazing answer: "Why, colonel, my boy, I left it with Charlie out there. He looked so cold in that snow. I thought of the mither of Charlie and I covered him up." Crazy Denny, foolish Denny, lovable Denny, wonderful Irish lad. Irish and Ireland uppermost in his mind until death.

* * * *

His eyes were breaking, but he loved his bleeding hand. "Can we do anything for you, Denny?" asked the colonel. "Sing us a song, ye heathens," whispered Denny, and there happened to be one man who had strength enough to get out a mouth-organ, a cheap half-dollar thing. "Come Back to Erin, Mavourneen, Mavourneen," he played. Denny smiled for the last time. Then he went to heaven.

Party vs. Party---And What?

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON

The republican national convention left behind it a trail of bad feeling, envy, disappointment—and disgust.

There is no use in even the most loyal of the Coolidge household denying that fact.

Republicans usually have a way of scrapping among themselves before and during a national convention, and then congealing into a common cause with "traditional unity" after a convention.

That rule didn't prove out, however, in 1912, and it is not likely to prove out in 1924.

Before the Wisconsin delegation left Cleveland it made reservations for a "second Cleveland convention" to be held on July 4.

At that time it is proposed to nominate Senator Robert M. LaFollette president on an independent ticket, with La Follette's well-known radical ideas grouped into a national platform.

It is common knowledge that the Wisconsin insurgent does not expect or hope to be elected.

He is and always has been and perhaps always will be an unyielding and an implacable foe. It is his nature—his political stock-in-trade.

His enmity for the Coolidge regime was necessarily intensified by the complete, pointed and even studied rebuke given to him and his followers before and during the convention.

The aim was direct, and the Coolidge bullets struck home at every fire.

The New England conservative showed the middle northwestern radical no quarters, and refused to accede to any compromise.

The La Follette group winced but "stuck it out," bitterness growing into the white heat of eruption the moment the convention's work was finished.

Robert M. La Follette, Jr., son of the Wisconsin senator, and chairman of the central republican committee of Wisconsin, immediately declared that in his opinion nothing could save the candidates nominated at the "first" Cleveland convention from defeat.

Blunders on the part of the Coolidge managers, a group of cabinet members who operated under the supervision of William M. Butler, republican national committeeman from Massachusetts, in connection with the selection of a candidate for second place on the ticket, in the opinion of the La Follette men, spattered what hope there was of republican success in the national election this year.

The younger La Follette was in frequent communication with his father throughout the convention. The successive moves of the La Follette delegates were undeniably in pursuance of strategy dictated by the Wisconsin senator himself with a view to putting the convention and the party of which nominally he is an exalted member "in wrong" with the voters.

His motive, therefore, is undoubtedly a punitive one, directed at the regulars of the republican party.

The democrats can profit by this situation if they proceed honorably and with first and only concern for the best interests of the whole people of this country, and for the firm dignified bearing of the party at all times without truckling to underhand influences, or yielding to the flirtations of extremists and radicals.

Neither parties nor individuals can afford to enter into insidious alliances, or into secret, star-chamber, cabalistic maneuverings with purely punitive groups in order to attain success.

Any lasting victory is built upon a foundation of public confidence; and the democrats can not afford to have the confidence of the public shaken in the party by planting its hopes upon the destructive influences at work in the republican party.

If it becomes the beneficiary of that condition, well and good. But its appeal to the public must be its candidate, its platform, its sincerity, and its record. It can not rely solely upon the mistakes of its opponents, or the division in its opponents' house.

To do so will arouse a sympathetic reaction that will carry it to defeat.

But La Follette is not the greatest of the republican party's troubles.

The old regulars are seriously scrapping among themselves.

The practical sidetracking of such war-horses as Lodge and Wadsworth and Moses and Watson and others, while amateurs were trolled to the arena, is a more serious party condition than the radical defection.

A far-reaching split in the New York delegation with Wadsworth, Hilles and Mills arrayed on one side as against Davenport, Hayward and others, was one of the interesting sidelights at Cleveland. There were many others of equal significance.

These were intensified in the wild scrambling over the nomination for a vice president, the conservative and the so-called progressive wings battling for position.

These wounds will not altogether heal during the campaign, for Coolidge is not of the pacifying, compromising kind. He plays his hand straight, shoots from the shoulder and is not a juggler of expediences.

The democrats will, with honor and good faith, benefit by this situation if they live up to the honored traditions of the party and do nothing at New York to shake public confidence, through the satisfying of personal aggrandizement at the expense of great party principles and traditions, or through yielding to outside temptors who are inspired solely by selfish motives.

The gapping division in republican ranks between the executive and legislative branches, the one repudiating the other, as shown by recent records, is of absorbing importance, and the democrats should benefit by that situation.

On the other hand, it must not be overlooked that the great victory of Calvin Coolidge at Cleveland was a victory of character.

It must not be forgotten, too, that the republicans everywhere had full opportunity to express their wishes. Eighteen states held presidential primaries. In all but two of these Coolidge won a complete victory. He swept clean the thirty delegate-convention states.

Of the 1,109 votes cast, he received 1,065; La Follette, 34, and Hiram Johnson, 10. There has been nothing like it since the coming of the direct primary.

The convention sweep to Coolidge was irresistible. Those who watched the three days at Cleveland know what a grip is his upon the mind and heart of his party. Cleveland moved in the lengthened shadow of the man from Massachusetts. An aroused party took the ancient and crusted toryism of the "senate oligarchy."

No good can come from minimizing or belittling the republican candidates or slurring the republican platform.

It contains many platitudes and is indefinite, especially on railroad legislation.

It does not carry the hope to the farmer that he had a right to expect, and yet it is undeniable that most farm legislation proposed has been to push him further into debt without the available means offered him for getting out of debt.

He needs markets, cooperation—a liberal foreign policy. The last thing he needs is more debt.

At any rate, all party platforms carry platitudes and expediencies. There is no sense in denying fundamental truths.

It would be a gross blunder for the democrats to underestimate the elements of Coolidge's political strength.

He cannot be beaten by a man who does not measure up to something like his own political stature. A few democrats are so deluded as to be boasting that they can win the election this year with any candidate. Forget it!

The candidate to be pitted against Coolidge will have to be his equal in character, in steadiness and in the feeling of security which he gives to the country, and superior to him in the gifts of vigorous leadership.

The eyes of the nation are now on New York, and democratic victory in November depends upon the sanity displayed in the approaching convention.

The democrats ought to win in November—and they can!

WEEKLY BIBLE TALK

Two Famous Old Testament Reformers

BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Text of Today's Bible Talk by Mr. Bryan.

(Nehemiah 8:1-3, 8-12)

And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel.

And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month.

And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate from the morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of law.

So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

And Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep. For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law.

Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your strength.

So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

A Hebrew scribe and priest and a Hebrew cup bearer to a Persian king stand out before us as leaders in restoration of faith through the text provided for today's Bible talk.

Both priest and cup bearer added luster to the history of their people at the same dark period. And this they did because both were godly men and earnest in pursuing God's work at all times and under all conditions.

Eighty years after Zerubbabel led the first return of the Jews from Babylonia, the home of their long exile, to Jerusalem, these two characters of the Old Testament come forth at the Lord's bidding and do their work, and become shining examples in reform for all time.

Ezra led the second return of the Jews to their ancient home from the land of their captivity.

The Persian king, Artaxerxes, allowed Ezra to return, giving him permission to take as large a company of Jews as cared to go. Ezra was also supplied with gold and silver, that he might offer sacrifices for the king in Jerusalem. Artaxerxes, in his generosity, resembled Cyrus, the Persian king of the first return from exile.

A Gift From God.

Ezra was a very devout man and accepted the good fortune that had come to him as a gift from the Almighty. He gathered together between seven and eight thousand Jews and arranged for them to meet at Ahava, outside the walls of Babylon.

At this rendezvou the Jews camped for three days, during which time they learned that they had no Levites in their company; only a few had returned with Zerubbabel. Messengers were sent to Babylon and thirty-eight Levites and two hundred and twenty temple servants were secured.

After fasting and prayer, Ezra and his companions started out on their long journey to Palestine. Instead of risking a shorter route through the desert, something like three hundred miles, they followed the Euphrates until they came near the Orontes valley and then entered Palestine from the north. The journey consumed about four months.

A Striking Reform.

The first, and probably the most striking, reform inaugurated by Ezra following his arrival in Jerusalem was the sending back of the heathen wives whom the sons of the Jews of the first return had taken from among the idolatrous tribes.

He had learned from Jewish history the demoralizing influence exerted upon the Children of Israel by the worshippers of idols.

Jezebel and the heathen wives of Solomon are outstanding illustrations of what idol-worshipping wives could do in leading husbands astray. The special concern of the faithful members of the race was to keep the blood from contamination. It is an indication of the completeness of the Jews' restoration to faith that this reform could be carried out.

It was a glorious policy that Ezra adopted, but he was choosing between two evils and preferred the lesser one of the two.

We suspend the story of Ezra for a moment to call attention to another character who added luster to the history of his people at this period.

Nehemiah was a cup bearer to the Persian king—a fact which certified to his high standing with Artaxerxes. The poisoning of kings was common in those days and it was the duty of the cup bearer to taste all beverages before they were handed to the monarch.

A Great Executive.

Nehemiah was quite secure in his high position, but he could have no peace when he learned from a brother, who had recently visited Jerusalem, that the returned exiles were suffering and that the walls of Jerusalem had not been rebuilt.

The burden upon his heart finally became so heavy that his sadness was noticed by the king, who inquired the cause of his sadness.

Nehemiah was bold enough to ask that he be sent to Jerusalem with authority to rebuild the wall, with assistance sufficient to accomplish his purpose.

The king granted his request and the cup bearer, obtaining a leave of absence, hastened to take up the task which he felt called upon to undertake.

Nehemiah developed into a great executive and a great leader.

He was beset by enemies, but they always found him alert and prepared, however unexpected the attack. He divided his people into two groups; while the members of one group worked on the wall, the members of the other group stood guard.

Nehemiah, undismayed, cheered his people on by his own confidence in God.

"I Am Doing a Great Work."

He gave to the master workers of succeeding generations a phrase that has often been quoted.

His enemies set a trap for him and invited him to a conference. His reply ought to be employed more frequently than it is:

"I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down."

Every individual is entitled to a chance to do the largest work within his reach and within his capabilities.

It is pathetic as well as indefensible for one to employ great talents in the doing of trivial things.

This is especially true if one allows material interests to divert his attention from the things of the kingdom.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" is as binding on this generation as upon those to whom it was spoken.

"The things that are seen" are just as temporal as they were nineteen hundred years ago; and "the things that are unseen" are just as eternal.

The People's Demand.

The verses which form the basis of today's text record a very important fact, namely, that the people initiated a demand for the reading of the law.

"All the people gathered themselves together as one man," and "they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses which the Lord had commanded to Israel."

Reforms originate with the people, and this kind of reform even more naturally than political or economic reforms.

It was "the common people" who "heard Christ gladly."

"The care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word." Human nature is not different in different people, but it is influenced by environment.

Solomon said, "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain."

He recognized that one might be made desperate by poverty and indifferent by wealth.

The great middle class is the source of a nation's strength; the progress of any country is measured by the progress of this class.

Abject poverty may present temptations greater than the well-to-do have to resist, just as the temptations presented by great wealth are greater than the common people have to resist. There is only one protection for rich and poor and that is faith in God and trust in His providences.

No one, if worthy, should despair of help; the Father who sent the ravens to feed Elijah will care for His children. "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father."

Neither should one trust in riches; they are perishable.

Job's experience gives us an illustration of calamities that come in a group. He had all the blessings upon which man is in the habit of relying, but, when these were taken, his trust remained and that trust was rewarded.

Faith vs. Worldly Goods.

We all know of people who have unexpectedly lost everything but their honor and who found in their faith more consolation than they found in worldly goods.

One such man, when he became poor, was chided with having been too generous; he replied:

"That which I gave, is all that I have left; that which I kept is gone."

"The ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law."

We are also told that those who read, "read distinctly" and "gave the sense," so that the people understood the reading.

Here we have two important statements; first, that the people were attentive—without attention understanding is impossible; and that the readers interpreted the passages read.

Those who are acquainted with the local environment interpret God's word to those who are pupils. Our missionaries gather about them natives who are called to preach and these convey the Bible message to their own people in their own way.

The people wept for joy when they understood the word of God. Nehemiah exhorted them not to weep, but to feast and be glad.

So, today, God's word should bring happiness.

"Be of good cheer" is Christ's salutation; His message is a message of peace.

He would have all happy in a sense of sins forgiven; He would have all enjoy the satisfaction that comes with service.

There is no place for continuing sadness in a Christian life. There is happiness in doing good; affliction, when borne with patience, can be consecrated to our spiritual welfare—even death is but a transient separation from the loved ones who await us on the farther shore.

Things New and Old About the Bible

Objections To Methodist Unification

BY REV. W. P. KING,
Pastor of First Methodist Church, Gainesville, Ga.

This discussion will make answer to objections which the writer does not consider reasonable.

A prejudiced appeal is made to the past. Objectors hark back to the separation in 1844 and later to the ill-feelings created by the civil war. It may be safely surmised that almost all the participants in the affair of 1844 are dead. We are face to face today with new people and new problems. This generation of Methodists, and especially the young people of this generation, do not propose to be governed by the passions and prejudices which root themselves in the past.

The recent meeting of the Methodist college students and their declaration against a divided Methodism confirms this assertion. Criticize as you will the impulsiveness of youth, but there is a revolt of youth which is commendable, a revolt against a certain type of old age that makes a mess of our national and ecclesiastical relationships and uses the past as a hitching post instead of a guide post.

The objection is raised that the Methodist Episcopal church is desirous of taking advantage of the Methodist Episcopal church, south. This is a serious accusation, since it denies that the members of the Northern Methodist general conference were actuated by a Christian spirit in their passage of the unification plan.

Why should it be assumed that the North wants to take advantage of the South any more than the South wants to take advantage of the North, especially in view of the fact that the plan was originated and suggested by southern men, and that the southern jurisdiction has the same powers as the northern and the judicial council has as many representatives from the southern church as the northern church?

The objection is urged that the practice of overlapping and competition is not prohibited. Bishops Denny and Ainsworth give much emphasis to this objection. They fail to take notice, however, of the fact that no new annual conference, mission conference or missions can be formed by either jurisdiction without the approval of the general conference. It is worth something to be assured that useless competition shall not be intensified in the future. But what of "building altar against altar," as it has prevailed in the past? I am convinced that there would be no remote possibility of unification under any method that would attempt to coerce churches or members from one jurisdiction to another. I have such confidence in the intelligence of Bishops Denny and Ainsworth as to believe that they would object even more strenuously to the impossible method of coercion than to the present plan.

Commission's Plan.

The joint commission for both churches has stated the only possible process by which needless overlapping may be eliminated.

"This plan gives due regard to the rights and preferences of church members living on the border where the two jurisdictions work side by side. Church membership is a sacred thing, and we recognize it as such. Arrangements are to be made for the transfer of members, preachers, churches, pastoral charges, districts, annual conferences, mission conferences and missions from one jurisdiction to the other; but 'no transfer shall be made without the consent of the member, preacher, church, pastoral charge, district, annual conference, mission conference or mission that it is proposed to transfer.' It is understood that in case of such transfer the initial movement shall be made by the party or parties chiefly concerned. That is to say, we do not believe that union can be forced. We, therefore, give our people and our organizations time and opportunity to grow together, and we believe that under this plan such growing together will immediately begin to take place. This provision amply protects minorities in each jurisdiction and is an example of that trust in each other without which real union cannot exist and increase."

The objection is urged that the difference in the polity of the two churches is such as to make unification impracticable. This objection is not so much against the present plan as against any plan and logically means to dismiss forever the question of unification since, of course, the divergence increases with the continuance of separation. Bishop Candler elaborated at length this objection. One item which the bishop stresses is the difference in the form for reception of members. "Our church asks of a candidate for membership nothing more than belief of the doctrines contained in the apostle's creed," while the northern church asks, "Do you believe in the doctrines of the holy Scriptures as set forth in the articles of religion of the Methodist Episcopal church?"

One can but wonder that if the conditions had been reversed in the two churches the bishop might not also have raised objection. The position of the bishop is a remarkable one, as he continues by saying that the condition laid down by the northern church is unscriptural, being more than Christ Himself requires. I would like very much to know where the bishop learned that Christ required assent to the apostle's creed as a condition of membership. The best answer, however, to this particular item in the objection is in the fact that the recent session of the northern conference changed the form for reception of members so that it now conforms to our own.

The fact in brief is that the policy of the two churches is substantially and fundamentally the same and only incidentally different.

Church and Politics.

The objection is made that the northern church meddles with politics. Bishop Candler writes:

"The northern church constantly meddles with political matters, as the southern church does not, and ought not to do."

To this it may be replied that the southern church does concern itself with politics, and the southern church ought to do so, and any church is criminally negligent which does not. Even the Baptist church, which is very zealous for the complete separation of church and state, also brings pressure on the legislative bodies. The church must make her voice heard and felt on the question of prohibition enforcement, on child labor, on international relationships and other political and moral questions. A church may be liable to just criticism for its position on some particular question of public concern, but the principle itself of pronouncing upon a great political, philanthropic and moral question is a binding obligation of the church. In a pamphlet by Bishop Marvin in 1872, which periodically reappears, we find these words: "The non-political character of the Church South as distinguished from the Church North is, as we conceive, the most vital point of difference between the two bodies." But in so far as the present situation is concerned one must blind his eyes to the evident facts who holds that the Methodist church south takes no hand in political questions.

Unification and the Negro.

There is a further objection to unification which springs out of the eternal shadow of the negro.

Bishop Ainsworth is very much disturbed at the thought of negro bishops. He says:

"The plan admits negroes into various councils of the church in a way that will not be approved in the south. Nearly a hundred negroes are now in the northern general conference and will remain in a similar proportion under a new arrangement. Two negro bishops now sit in exact parity with the rest in the northern group and preside over the body in turn and have presided over the general conference. They will continue in the same relation to the united groups and will preside in both the college of bishops and the general conference, so far as any guarantees of the law are concerned."

There is the awful fear that a negro bishop may preside over the general conference. Bishop Ainsworth knows very well that this cannot happen without a majority vote of the bishops of the southern as well as the northern jurisdiction.

It is barely supposable that a majority of our bishops would act after this reckless fashion. Of course we have made mistakes in the selection of bishops, mistakes which we have no chance to correct, but it is hardly probable that we will ever have a majority of our bishops who will utterly disregard the sentiment of our church. As to negroes sitting in the councils of the church, it is only in the jurisdiction to which they belong. I cannot see the bugaboo in this arrangement. The fact is, our own church has established a mission in Africa. We must desire that our work there shall either succeed or fail. If it succeeds, then in the long run there would be negro representatives from Africa in the councils of our own church. So, if unification fails, the only way for those who tremble at the shadow of the negro to prevent the "fearful calamity" of "negroes in the council of the church" is to see to it that the missionary work in Africa fails.

"Doubtful Legality."

An objection is raised that a unification consummated by a method of "doubtful legality" would be necessarily accompanied by calamity. It is held that since the called session of the general conference is not legal, the process of unification would be begun through an illegal process.

Bishop W. A. Candler, who springs this objection, relies on the old provision of 1808 for calling a special session of the general conference. However much one may revere the letter of an old law, especially if it is an old law that suits him, it is utterly impossible to stop the movement of a living fact with a dead letter. The church today will not be guided for one moment by a provision that turns a small majority into an autocracy and that would enable the smallest annual conference to block the movement of a whole church. And yet the claim is set forth that all "legal difficulties" would have been removed if we had complied with this ancient provision. Such a provision in the present day is crushed by the weight of its own absurdity. The reply may be made that the lapse of years cannot affect a sacred constitutional provision. This, however, brings to my mind an awful gripping fear to the effect that the two Methodist churches have never been separated. In 1844 the general conference voted a separation, but it was never ratified by the annual conferences. The general conference of the northern church in 1848 raised the question of illegality. So our curious situation is that we are trying to get together and trying not to get together when we have never been separated. But if we must reckon with a stubborn fact and confess that we are separated, then the strange proposition is urged upon us that the general conference actually has the power of dividing a church and is without the power of calling itself together through the bishops. Such is the dilemma into which desperation drives

WHY GROW OLD

Abandon Your Youth and You Perish

BY O. O. McINTYRE

The other night at a vaudeville show I sat behind two white bearded old gentlemen who seemed amused at antics of several comics on the stage. Their eyes twinkled with merriment but somehow I got the idea they feared to laugh out loud. It might make them conspicuous.

Perhaps it occurred to them that if they had laughed uproariously people would have turned and laughed at them. They appeared to feel tottering and senile. All about were those in the full flush of youth.

It has always seemed to me that old age is a matter of thinking. Most of us in middle years are happy when we see our elders enjoying life to the fullest. It gives us courage to carry on.

I know an old fellow down at Bayside, L. I., who is in his late seventies. He is known as "spry" and not so many weeks ago he played leapfrog with some boys in the neighborhood. He did not lose any dignity by his frolic. In fact the boys were mightily complimented that he joined them.

Old age does not command the friendliness due it because many of the aged are aloof and austere. I believe all of us are highly pleased when elders take us into their confidence. We know they know much more of life than we.

After all, we can't all be young and it isto our elders that we turn for inspiration and advice. Why old age acquires a veneer of austerity is something I have never been able to fathom.

It seems to me the young man of 23 or 24 is much more suitable for the chimney corner than the man of 60 or 70. Youth should do a lot of thinking. Old age should fling off restraint.

One of the best dancers in New York is a silver haired gentleman of 66. Once a week he goes out to the dancing places with granddaughter She enjoys his company. They have a mighty fine time together. He leaves at a respectable hour and does not indulge the contraband bibbling of younger folk. He is a prominent man of affairs—a lawyer who attends to huge corporate interests. He is not going to grow old without a struggle.

He has a spring to his walk. There are very few wrinkles. He keeps young by being young.

When men abandon their hold on youth, they perish. Years should not slough off all desire for a few of the simple pleasures of life.

In one of the department stores there is a head forelady who is a small, active woman past 60. Her eyes are as bright as those of a girl of 20 and there are winter apples in her cheeks. She once told me: "I started to grow old at 50. Everything began to slip away. I began to see that no contribution of mine had made the world kindlier or happier.

"I decided in a measure to begin life all over again. I sought out younger people. I became interested in all the whirling life that I was losing. It didn't take me long to get back into the swim. I feel as young as I did at 30. And I'm going to stay that way until they cart me off to some Old Lady's home."

There is a veteran reporter on one of the morning newspapers. He is more than double the age of most of his associates. But there is not one among them more livelier. He joins in their pranks. He plays card games with them in moments of relaxation. He invites them to his home. In short, he is one of them. He is the sort of old fellow they will never call "Pop."

Old men will say, "the young folks don't want me around." They are creating their own barrier. After all we must fight for most of the good things of life and surely mixing with younger folk is worth a little fight on the part of elders.

There is a club in New York called the "Young Boys' Outing club." Many of its members are people of affluence but according to standards they are old. They give the youthful name as a joke, but it has a big meaning after all. They go on fishing and hunting trips and they try to keep young. They do not permit one another to discuss aches or pains or other gloomy subjects. It is about the happiest crowd of old men to be found anywhere.

Sometimes the newspapers josh about their outings but they do not wince. They are young enough to enjoy a little joke on themselves and they realize it is the spirit of the club that really counts.

One of them said recently: "I might be growing old, but I don't feel so. I have fought some hard battles in business. I won in business. Now I am giving old age a hard battle and I have a sneaking idea I am going to win that fight too." And no doubt he will.

The other night at the Hippodrome there was a polar bear act. Six bears went through their stuff on a humid night. When the trainer had taken his bow and the curtain dropped all but one of the bears trotted dutifully through the runway to their cage. This one grew stubborn. There is a great difference between a hot night on Sixth avenue and an Arctic evening. The sullen old bear seemed to think he had been browbeaten enough. He was coaxed, cajoled and beaten but he refused to go through the runway. The trainer worked until 4 o'clock in the morning to no avail. He finally decided to take a brief nap. At six he awakened, opened the door to the runway and the bear lumbered straightway to his cage—apparently pleased he had been able to hold out for so long against his master.

There is an interesting store on Sixth Avenue near 24th street. It is patronized only by the theatrical profession and the dealer specializes in hats for knockabout comedians. He has hats to crush over the eyes, high hats to be kicked about and straw hats to be smashed. One comedian who is his patron uses 15 straw hats nightly. The dealer buys the hats from old clothes men who collect them in their roving about town. He sells them for about 50 cents each and has been able to make a good living and buy a home in the Bronx.

There is talk of society returning to the Battery. Real estate visionaries predict this for New York's Four Hundred in not so many years. There are many tumble down homes below Fulton Street that could be made into splendid places with yards. There is the tang of the sea in the air. At night it is the quietest spot in town and it has the advantage of being near the money center where those who build homes will be able to get to their residences without so much rush and confusion. The district now has many fine bungalow homes that have been built on the roofs of skyscrapers.

A New York landmark disappeared in the tearing down of the Harvard Building which for more than 50 years stood at the southwest corner of Forty-second street and Sixth Avenue. For years it was the home of the New York school known as Everson's. There were educated in their primary grades many New Yorkers who left easily identified footsteps on the path of life they subsequently followed.

COLLAR BUTTONS USED AS STAKES IN NEWEST GAME

London, June 14.—London's next contribution to international gaiety may be matching for collar buttons.

The sport has caught on here, and as it flourishes principally around the west end hotels frequented by American tourists, may spread to the United States.

The game is to match coins for the loser's collar-button instead of for money.

"It is much more fun and far less expensive than matching for money," an addict explains, "and they do look so silly when they lose."

'THY NAME IS WOMAN,' IS HOWARD FEATURE

Mlle. Amalia and Her Ballet Featured in Prologue.

With a highly charged story of passionate love, a background of great scenic beauty, played by a cast of stars and made by one of the industry's cleverest directors, "Thy Name Is Woman," which will play at the Howard all this week, is one of the most thrilling productions of the year.

It is the latest film to be turned out by Fred Niblo, the master director. The cast includes such favorites as Ramon Novarro, Barbara La-Marr, Edith Roberts, William V. Mong, Wallace MacDonald, Robert Edeson and Claire MacDowell. The picture is taken from Earl Schoenherr's stage play, the American version of which (by Benjamin Glazer) had a very successful run on Broadway last season, with Mary Nash and Jose Rubens in the principal roles.

Advance reports on the production declare it to be wonderfully effective in the power and dramatic scope of its various love interests. The story is centered around the beautiful young wife of an old smuggler in the Spanish Pyrenees. A dashing young soldier is sent to make love to her and thus find the key that will lead to the capture of the crafty bandit.

The call of youth prevails and the officer and the wife actually fall in love, causing jealousy in the hearts of three other characters. The development from this premise forms an absorbing tale of revenge, thrilling action, and final solution, that will keep spectators pop-eyed with excitement.

Novarro, of course, has the role of Juan Ricardo, the young soldier. It is the first time that this handsome young Spaniard has had a Spanish role on the screen. On top of his brilliant work in the title role of Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," he is fortunate in finding a role that gives full scope to his fiery, romantic powers. He proves himself in truth "the great lover of the screen."

Miss LaMarr, as Guerita, the smuggler's wife, shares honors with him in an impersonation of passionate emotionalism and burning Latin intensity.

Buel B. Risinger has arranged an elaborate rendition of Chabrier's "Spanish Rhapsody" as the overture this week and the Howard Symphony orchestra's interpretation of this colorful work will be further enhanced by a brilliant dance offering with the finale of the overture, featuring Marvin Herron and Alice Turner, of the Amalia corps de ballet, who are appearing in the prologue this week.

A great deal of attractive Spanish music is used in the score for the feature, the theme being Mr. Risinger's own "Eyes of Brown" from his "Nazimova Suite." Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnole," Rossi's "Suite Modern," Gauwin's "Scenes Villageoises," and incidental music from Rosse's "Merchant of Venice" suite are also included in the score.

The comedy is "Cat's Meow," a Pathe-Mack Sennett comedy packed with luscious laughs and giggles. The comedy will be scored with the usual galaxy of popular foxtrots interpreted by the incomparable Howard symphojazz units with the Risinger-Utermoehlen special arrangements.

The prologue is the "Howard Ballet Divertissement," Mlle. Amalia, premiere danseuse, and her corps de ballet of five dancers.

"Shooting of Dan McGrew" Is the Big Movie Feature.

Telling the whole story connected with what is perhaps the best known poem in America, the Sawyer-Lubin production of "The Shooting of Dan Grew," a Metro picture, will play all this week at Loew's Grand theater. As a result of a popular vote Barbara La Marr, Lew Cody and Percy Marmont were chosen to play the famous roles of The Lady Known as Lou, Dangerous Dan McGrew and The Stranger. These players are supplemented by a cast that includes Mae Busch, George Siegmann, Max Ascher, Phillipe de Lacy and many others.

Robert W. Service's story of the Yukon has been brought to the screen with life-like vividness by Winifred Dunn, who wrote the film version, and Director Clarence Badger, who has to his credit such productions as "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and "Potash and Perlmutter."

Not only has the splendid climax been faithfully reproduced, but the events leading up to it have been worked out in full. Service wrote the poem from an actual incident of the gold rush in the Yukon, and the Metro picturization has gone a step further and told the whole story of this tragic encounter between the two men.

The early married life of Lou and Jim is shown—their happiness and contentment while appearing as dancer and musician in South Sea Island ports, and the first rumblings of disaster at the introduction of Dan McGrew. Later the story shifts to New York and finally to the Yukon.

"A bunch of the boys were whooping it up in the Malamute saloon;
The kid that handles the music box was hitting a rag-time tune;
Back of the bar, in a solo game, sat Dangerous Dan McGrew,
And watching his luck, was his light-o'love,
The lady that's known as Lou."

Then out of the night on vengeance bent came the man of Lou's past. "One of you is a hell-hound, and that one is Dan McGrew," the voice sounded over the room. The lights went out and two guns blazed in the dark, and a woman screamed, and the lights went on.

Romance, thrills and heartaches set in the most picturesque regions of the earth from Alaska to the South Seas. This is the treat in store for you this week at Loew's Grand theater.

According to advance reports, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is crammed with fiery action and variety of scene, and is sure to arouse unusual interest because it reveals the heretofore unknown details at which Mr. Service hinted in his poem.

Lew Cody, who plays the title role in the Metro-SL picture, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," coming to the Grand theater, writes songs for a hobby, which invariably add to his income. Mr. Cody's latest composition is called "Dangerous Dan McGrew." It is based on the picture.

"Years ago I was in the newspaper business," says Cyril Ring, Paramount actor, who is seen as a reporter in "The Guilty One," which features Agnes Ayres. "I had a route of 113 customers," he added, "and delivered my papers, rain or shine."

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY THE RIALTO FEATURE

Everything of the Wild Night Life To Be Shown.

A picture that is going to prove an eye-opener to the young people of Atlanta as well as to their fathers and mothers is "Daughters of Today," which will open Monday at the Rialto theater for the first showing at eleven o'clock and will continue the rest of the week.

It is a picture that makes you think while it entertains you. It has a moral as all good and worthwhile plays should have, but in this instance it is not labeled as such. It tells a story and lets you figure it out for yourself, which, after all, is about the best way to get over a point and explain your mission.

"Daughters of Today" has a mission.

It deals with that extensive group of the younger set who seem to have mistaken license for liberty, who in their mad pursuit of pleasure have forgotten the very fundamentals upon which society and perhaps civilization is founded.

Who is to blame for this wild bacchanal?

Is it that youth, having found a crack in the armor of restraint and puritism, has ripped it asunder and is fighting its way to absolute independence in thought and conduct? Or is the result of too much knowledge of things that only a few years ago was taboo? At any rate it is a perplexing question and many mothers and fathers of both types will find themselves and their progeny reflected in the dramatic story that is unfolded.

The play is called "a slice of life today," and is aptly termed. It is a flapper story but a different kind of a flapper story. It has its "neckers," its "vestibule shieks," its cocktail parties, midnight bathing adventures and other amusements that seem to be au fait with the younger drinking set. But back of this is a seriousness of purpose and a dramatic intensity to the story and acting that justifies its description. The scenes of the story are largely laid in the atmosphere of a big city where the iron hand of discipline seems to have grown lax and the boys and girls seem to do just about as their whims dictate.

The story chiefly concerns Lois Whittal, a beautiful young sub-deb, who is the product of a new freedom, and Mabel Vandegrift, a simple little country girl, whose sheltered life and ignorance of the world is in direct contrast to her. Mabel's beauty gives her entree to the little clique ruled over by the vivacious Lois and here she meets Ralph Adams, a young aristocrat and his cousin Reggie, a ne'er-do-well and waster. The adventures of these two girls, their outlook of life, and finally the testing of the stuff of which they are made, composes the dramatic texture of the play, which is neither all frivolity nor all tragedy, but a realistic delineation of life in this jazz-mad day of ours.

Patsy Ruth Miller, who is rapidly coming to the front as one of the brightest stars in the screen firmament, is seen as the society debutante, and Ralph Graves, a manly juvenile, whose early successes were recorded in some of the biggest of D. W. Griffith's productions, has the part of Ralph Adams, and gives an intelligent and sympathetic interpretation to the role. Philo McCullough is such a realistic villain that one, forgetting his acting on the screen, feels a great surge of satisfaction when he pays the penalty of his philanderings.

Phillips Smalley, Edna Murphy, Zasu Pitts and others are in the capable cast.

The Rialto program also has a comedy, a Newsreel and other short subjects.

Snub Pollard in an extremely funny comedy called "Jack Frost," also will be on the Rialto program.

The Rialto also shows the International Newsreel, which is changed on Thursday.

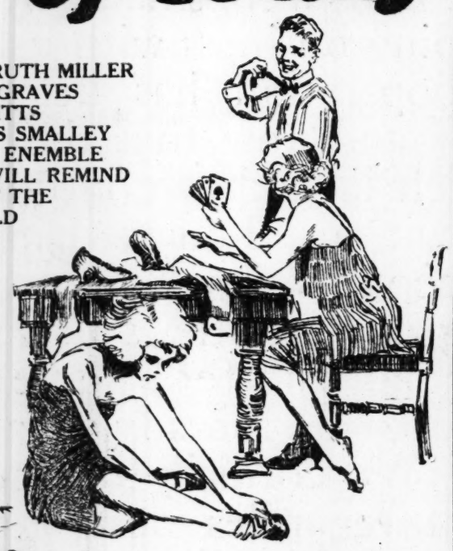

Packed houses and lines at the box office are being prepared for at the Rialto by Manager Murray from the first showing at eleven o'clock Monday to the last show on Saturday night.

BALDWIN PLAYERS IN A BIG NEW COMEDY

John B. Litel Is Featured in "Here Comes the Bride."

As a competent sequel, both in name and in entertaining powers, to the brilliant success scored by the Baldwin Players at the Atlanta theater the past week in the quickly moving comedy vehicle "I Love You," the company this week will present "Here Comes the Bride," an unsurpassable play of laughs and thrills that made a distinct hit when it was produced in New York.

It is one of those kind of plays that keeps the audience in a ligh state of mirth from the raising of the first curtain until the very last. And members of the Baldwin Players being, as they are, past masters in the matter of comedies, it is bound to be one of the most pleasing productions by that organization during its summer engagement at the Atlanta.

John B. Litel the popular leading man, will, of course, be cast in the feature role—a role in which the versatile young actor is given every opportunity of displaying his personality and prowess that Atlanta knows he possesses.

Mr. Litel was a scream in his part during the performance of the past week, and his coming role is so similar that it presages another big triumph for him here.

Miss Gladys Hurlbut, pretty leading woman, is also cast in a part to which she is admirably suited. Miss Hurlbut, while a capable actress in heavy dramatic parts, such as Atlanta theater audiences remember her in "Anna Christie" and others, is nevertheless a master with comedy bits.

She, of course is the bride. Mr. Litel is the groom, and around this couple has been woven a story as fragrant with thrilling incidents, as keen with clean humor and as dramatic as ever a comedy could be.

Romaine Callender will only serve to increase his huge popularity with Atlanta theatergoers during his performance in the show this week, if indications from those who have seen rehearsals mean anything.

The Atlanta management has devised a novel plan of inviting as its guests for a box party during the coming week all couples in Atlanta who are to be married between Monday and Saturday. Each couple will be given a number, and the lucky number will be given a handsome wedding present by the Atlanta theater.

JOHN LITEL TO GIVE BOX PARTIES FREE

Maybe you are one of those several hundred Atlantans who, sometime during the coming week, will march up to the altar to the strains of Mendelssohn and answer a lot of questions with "I do."

If so, you should see "Here Comes the Bride," the fast, scintillating comedy vehicle that is to be staged by the Baldwin players at the Atlanta theater all this week, and because it would be a splendid prenuptial occasion, the management has invited all couples intending to be married during the coming week to be its guests at a box party any night they so desire.

The play is one of those kind that is enjoyed to the fullest by those past the stage of matrimony and those about to leave the state of blessed singleness.

And all those who accept the invitation of the Atlanta theater will be given coupons, bearing a number. These numbers will be put into a hat Saturday night after the show and drawn by John B. Litel, popular leading man of the company, and the lucky couple will be given a wedding present by the theater.

Beatrice Benton, whose face has appeared in magazines and on billboards all over the country as the girl "with the schoolgirl complexion," is the latest artists' model to enter motion pictures. Cecil B. DeMille has signed her to appear in "Feet of Clay," which he has just started.

Bebe Daniels wears a wig for the first time in her motion picture career in the scenes of "Monsieur Beaucaire," in which she plays the role of the Princess de Bourbon-Conti opposite Rudolph Valentino.

THE T-HEATRES

LYRIC PLAYS REVIVAL OF 'LONESOME PINE'

Isabelle Lowe Will Portray Again First Starring Role She Ever Had.

Miss Isabelle Lowe is to play again this week the character in which Atlanta first saw her and the first leading part she ever had, "June" in Eugene Walters' stage version of the John Fox, Jr., love story, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

The production this week will be in the nature of a "revival de luxe" of the popular melodrama of a few years ago and is to be lavishly staged according to the plans of the Lyric management.

The players have had great success with previous revivals of old plays, the most recent one, "Saint Elmo," having packed the house at nearly every performance. The occasional digression from the usual program of presenting only the latest Broadway successes is intended to add the ultimate touch of variety to the amusement diet of local theatergoers.

First Starring Role.

The Walters' play is of more interest locally than any others whose popularity reached its crest a decade or more ago because it was Miss Lowe's first starring vehicle. When the play first was produced in New York she was still in short dresses. Along toward the close of its long Broadway run she had "broken into" the theater with a few excellently done bits of acting in child roles. Her long tour with the "Littlest Confederate" had ended when the cast was being picked for "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Although not quite 16, Miss Lowe won the leading role, her first lead, and played it successfully for two years on tour, visiting Atlanta on a swing through the south. The prestige won in that engagement was of material assistance in getting her first starring part on Broadway.

The story of June's love for the handsome engineer and her difficulties in overcoming the feud spirit of her kinsmen and the murderous jealousy of her cousin has been told in the book, the song and the play and is familiar to most theatergoers.

People who remember the story will be struck by the aptitude each of the Lyric players has for the character in which he is cast this week. The play almost seems to have been written for the players.

Lytell as Sweetheart.

Miss Lowe, as June, will be supported by Wilfred Lytell as John Hale, the young engineer; Robert Smiley as Judd Tolliver, her rough father; Edwin Vail as Dave Tolliver, her cousin, suitor and "heavy" of the play; Will Loyd as Bob Berkely, John's partner. The rich comedy incident of the play is to be supplied chiefly by Rankin Mansfield as Cal Heaton, of Lonesome Cove, Marion White as his sister Loretty, Gus Forbes as Uncle Billy Bean, justice of the peace, and Ramona Weaver as "Ole Hon," his wife.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" offers a heart full of romantic interest and excitement and humor in plenty. The mountaineers of the Blue Ridge, lawless and quick with the gun, the mountains themselves and the "lonesome pine" lend a rare atmosphere of romance and adventure to the play. June herself is an adorable mountain wild flower.

The play opens Monday at "ladies' bargain night" prices and continues all week with matinees Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

JIMMY HODGES OFFERS COMEDY THIS WEEK

Big Musical Comedy Company Furnishes Laughs Aplenty.

Every means that has been contrived by the theatrical world intended to make folks laugh, have been employed in the production of "That's My Wife," which will be offered patrons of the Forsyth theater by the Jimmie Hodges Musical Comedy company all this week, beginning Monday matinee.

"That's My Wife" is one of the sort of musical bits that simply effervesce with melody and mirth. Its lines are full of wit and its songs new and catchy. But above all it provides Jimmie Hodges with a part in which he has the opportunity of using every bit of comedy material he has, and everybody knows that's as boundless as the sea.

For Jimmie Hodges has firmly established his reputation with Atlanta theatergoers through his two previous performances here. He is considered almost unanimously as the best comedian and entertainer Atlanta has seen in many a year.

Miss Bonnie TeBeau, the pretty leading lady, will, of course, be the center of attraction from the feminine part of the company. Her beauty and grace, her splendid voice and terpsichorean prowess, to say nothing of her dramatic ability, has endeared her to Forsyth patrons, and she alone is a big drawing card on the program.

One of the features of this week's offerings will be the specially made costumes for the big beauty chorus. Few musical companies have played in Atlanta which could surpass the Hodges company from a standpoint of costumic beauty, for Mr. Hodges and his production assistants are very careful in seeing that their girls are most bewitchingly attired, for, as it is said, therein lies a women's chief charm.

It is the aim of the company to offer light, frothy entertainment, just the kind for summer weather, and Atlanta is enjoying and appreciating it, too, if the box office is a barometer of the interest being manifested in the project.

"We want Atlantans to feel like this is their own temple of mirth," said Mr. Hodges. "We are striving to please them with clean, wholesome but very spicy musical entertainment, and I feel like we are succeeding. Many messages of congratulation have come in to the Forsyth management since the opening of the summer season of musical comedy shows, and we intend to keep up the high standard set in our first two performances."

Three performances are given daily, at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon and at 7:30 and 9:15 o'clock in the evenings. Popular prices of 30 cents in the afternoons and 60 for the night shows are being maintained.

GEORGIA SERENADERS HEADLINERS AT LOEW'S

Great Jazz Band Organization Tops Big Week at Loew's Grand.

This week is "big week" at Loew's magnitude of which has not been matched this year.

First on the list and headlining a big bill of vaudeville are the famous Georgia Serenaders, who need no introduction in this city. They come to Atlanta on Loew's circuit direct from the Carlton Terrace in Cleveland, where they have been under contract to Sophie Tucker, who discovered this remarkable aggregation of jazz band artists at the Roosevelt Grand theater with a program the hotel (formerly the Grunewald) in New Orleans.

Next is the great picture, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," from the famous poem by Robert W. Service, one of the most remarkable picturizations ever made.

There are now nine men in the Georgia Serenaders who have become styled "The Fashion Plate Syncopaters," and they play every instrument on the board. Never has an aggregation of artists of this type ever gained as much popularity. Organized in 1921 the Georgia Serenaders have been built up to an organization that has gained nationwide recognition, their entry into vaudeville on the Loew's circuit being their latest and most important step.

Next on the list of the big vaudeville acts is the skit by Caverly and Wald, entitled "Rice Pudding," which skit includes comedy, songs, dances and stories in such a mixture as to make it a sure success. This is one of the funniest skits in vaudeville, and is guaranteed as a laugh producer.

Clark and Villani take off the Italian character in vaudeville to a nicety. There is some real good singing in this act, which, together with plenty of humorous situations, makes "The Income Tax" the name of the skit, a real ten minutes of entertainment.

Bilton Berle has an act that will be a great treat as well as a distinct surprise. Advance notices announced Mr. Berle as "Established Since 1906."

Downey and Claridge in "Wait and See" are marvels at the skating game, and are as funny as any two burlesque figures seen here this year. Made up as tramps these two promise some real entertainment.

The entire show will be broadcast by W. S. B. on Monday at 9 p. m., Tuesday at 3:35 and Wednesday at 6:45, making an added feature to the "big week" at Loew's Grand.

At the Paramount.

(For Colored Only.)

"How Women Love," the latest picture starring Betty Blythe, which comes to the Paramount Monday, deals with the hopes and fears of a young prima donna (played by Miss Blythe), who is forced to promise "not to fail in love" and who promptly and helplessly goes back on her promise by falling in love with a young American composer. This melodious background is responsible for the biggest scene in what is said to be one of the best screen plays of the year.

The action necessitates the presentation of an opera—supposedly written by the hero—at a great charity fete. In order to get the full advantage from this scene, it was necessary to actually present an opera.

ANOTHER JACKIE COOGAN.

Kids of all races and creeds in every town and hamlet in the United States have imitated Jackie Coogan. Whenever one of Jackie's pictures is shown there is certain to be a Coogan Similarity Contest, but now for the first time there is really another boy by the name of Jackie Coogan.

In yesterday's mail, addressed to Jackie's home, came announcement of the birth of a baby boy in Oklahoma City, and his name is "Jackie Coogan" Wilhote. Now Jackie can surely add another fan to the admiring millions who patronize his films, and the little star has written personally to his namesake wishing him a long life of happiness.

METROPOLITAN SHOWS 'TEMPORARY HUSBAND'

In Which Are Starred Syd Chaplin, Owen Moore and Sylvia Braemer.

A light, airy program, just the kind for the hot weather, is offered at the Metropolitan this week. A variety of short subjects will be presented, including Our Gang Comedy, Jubilo Jr.

Several musical novelties are promised by Enrico Leide for the presentation of this picture. An all-star cello quartet, composed by Messrs. Leide, Walker, Richter and Effel, will interpret the famous Schubert Serenade. In addition to this feature, a piano duet, played by Messrs. Verdi and Foretich, will present for the first time in Atlanta Klavier Klawings, an oddity especially composed by Mr. Foretich. John L. Richmond, an unusual singer and a new acquisition to the musical colony of Atlanta, will sing the latest Irving Berlin's ballad, "What'll I Do?" with a new stage setting and novel interpretation. The overture will be a selection of melodies from Wild Flower, and it will include the opening chorus, Wild Flower and Bambalina. For the Fun from the Press a new Broadway hit has been selected, "Just a Little Bit of Love."

In "Her Temporary Husband."

Sidney Chaplin, famous brother of the celebrated Charles Chaplin, returns to the screen to play a most important comedy role.

It is a First National screen version of Edward Paulton's popular stage success of the same title. It was adapted to the screen by F. McGrew Willis, one of filmdom's most brilliant scenario writers. John McDermott directed it.

"Her Temporary Husband" is an excruciatingly humorous comedy, centering about a young girl who, to win a fortune, is forced to marry within twenty-four hours.

The girl, not wishing to burden herself with the troubles and tribulations of matrimony, yet wishing to win the legacy, goes to a sanitarium and chooses as a husband a decrepit old man with one foot in the grave and the other on a banana skin, to later wake up to the realization that the man she really married was a young admirer who had made up to represent the older man.

Owen Moore plays the part of the disguised invalid. Sidney Chaplin enacts the role of his valet, a lugubrious individual who has a peculiar facility of always doing the right thing at the wrong time.

Sidney is a member of an exceptionally talented all-star cast, which includes Owen Moore, Sidney Chaplin, Sylvia Breamer, Chuck Reisner, Tully Marshall, Charles Gerrard, George Cooper and others.

Charlie Murray has finished the greatest role in his screen experience in Earl Hudson's "Sundown." He is now with Larry Semon in "The Girl in the Limousine."

"HOT DOG"

"Chien chaud! What a beautiful setting!"

Exclaimed Lou Tellegen, who plays an important role in "Single Wives," the First National production now under way.

"Chien chaud" seemed to be a favorite expression of this popular actor, and excited the curiosity of Corinne Griffith and Milton Sills, who are being co-featured. "What does it mean, Lou?" asked Miss Griffith.

"In French that mean 'Hot Dog'," answered Tellegen, "I am catching on to your American, quick, eh?"

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

DR. FELIX SCHILLING.

Summer Ghosts: This is the month of June and sunshine, and roses are at last in evidence in the south, so a part of the title "Summer Ghosts and Winter Topics," by Dr. Felix Schilling, professor of English literature in the University of Pennsylvania, is most appropriate at this time.

The book is filled with unique thoughts on ordinary subjects. The first essay, "Summer Ghosts," will arouse the curiosity of the looker-on, and if he follows this appeal he will enjoy it, also all the others. It is, indeed, a refreshing collection in which humor is combined with wisdom and sane ideas.

Dr. Schilling knows how to be serious as well as happy and gay. He knows how to talk about books and literature in general as well as to describe the pleasure derived from a trip to a blueberry patch. He knows all about "The Poor Relation," "Nature," "How to Help the Farmer," about a certain "Little River," and of the many things one may do "Between Supper and Bed." He seems familiar with the way to "Bring Home the Cows," which is followed by a tribute to "Toby," who "ain't no dawg; you's jes' folks." But when Toby went away Nicholas II, a foreign aristocrat, appeared, and while he could not take the place of the other dog, it seems that he made a place for himself in the affection of those who were devoted to Toby.

Another very interesting essay is on the "Sabbatarian." The definition given by the author is "one who keeps a recurrent day of rest and worship in the strict observance of certain laws and injunctions of his own making to which he usually attributes a divine origin. Six days of the week he leave as God made them; to labor in, to cheat in, to love or hate in, to waste or harvest, but on the seventh he concentrates his religion," etc. Now how the Sabbatarian does this is interesting.

The reader will find something to interest h[i]s various moods in Dr. Schilling's new book, and if he should devote an hour or two with it he will be in good and interesting company. (J. B. Lippincott company, Philadelphia.)

MYSTERY BOOKS.

With the summertime in which picnics, hiking parties, swimming parties, automobile rides take the lead, the library has few visitors but the following mystery stories are suitable for any occasion—take a book with you when you go fishing and between bites spend your time in reading:

The Wrath To Come. By E. Phillips Oppenheim, author of "The Great Impersonation," and other books which have placed the Oppenheim books among the best mystery stories of the day.

Every Oppenheim reader will find this book of special interest for he deals with the world politics in 1950, with the Pact of Nations, established in 1930, and practically making war among its members impossible. (Little Brown & Co. Boston.)

The Terrified Mystery. By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, who asks Can Innocent Man be Convicted of Murder? The book contains some startling disclosures in trial of Famous Cricketer which would seem to answer in the affirmative. Besides this exciting mystery story there is a delightful love story. (Doubleday, Page & Co. Garden City, N. Y.)

The Narrow Street. By Edwin Bateman Morris, who seems to be a young author and yet he has several interesting novels to his credit, among them being "Blue Anchor Inn." "The Millionaire," "Our Miss York" and the "Cresting Wave."

The leading character in "The Narrow Street" is a most interesting and unusual character—and one which will prove a real study for the reader. Of course there is an attractive heroine, and there is just enough excitement in the story to make it entertaining. (The Penn Publishing Co. Philadelphia.)

The Clevedon Case. A strange episode in the career of Dennis Holt. By Nancy and John Oakley, who have woven a very exciting story around Dennis Holt—Criminologist, which is filled with thrills, in fact unusual thrills even in the life of a man who is accustomed to having the marrow chilled in his many experiences. This story begins with one dramatic night, which is sure to keep the reader all keyed up waiting for the grand climax. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia.

A Gentleman in Pajamas. A real good detective story by Charles Neville Buck, also can claim an unusually charming love story in which the hero and the heroine are innocently connected with the crooked game. There's plenty of excitement—it is like a guessing contest. (The Century Co.)

NEW FICTION.

The Black Hood. By Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation," etc. The author and his books are perhaps known to all readers of books, fiction or otherwise. In discussing his new story of a time that is passed he says:

"The passing of the full half century from 1873 to 1923 has made it possible at last to see these events in their true perspective and record their significance." (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Passionate Year. By James Hilton, is the story of Kenneth Speed, a young English public school teacher who seemingly falls in love with the young daughter of his superior professor, and after a whirlwind courtship a marriage follows which proves to be a very unhappy one and soon an estrangement comes. He then loses his popularity in the school and the town. And as is usually the case the ex-husband finds himself a creature of circumstances.

The story is well written, yet containing the same old problems that time seems not to be able to solve. It is full of excitement and a fine piece of drama to the last chapter. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

The Red Beacon. By Concha Espina, translated by Frances Douglas. The author is considered one of Spain's most popular writers and she tells the story of Dulce Nombre, the miller's daughter, in a human interest way that will appeal to the reader.

The scene is laid in northern Spain, "a land whose ways and days are peculiarly in key with the story." She uses poverty as the role of villain in the girl's life, for her sweetheart leaves her to make a home for her in America, not being willing to doom her to a life of hardships, but which brings sorrow, for Dulce is finally influenced to marry Malgor, who is rich and twice her years, but it does not change her love or her waiting for the lover who left her to make his fortune in the great America.

This is the plot and the author has woven a story full of action, pathos and appeal, one in which the reader will find his greatest sympathy for the girl and for the woman as the story slowly unfolds. (D. Appleton & Co., New York)

Roles. By Elizabeth Alexander. While the title might indicate several stories, the reader probably would not guess that the author tells the story of how a young wife in a certain well known little city in the United States, becoming bored with life, leaves home and a loving husband for New York, the catch-all of all unhappy and discontented persons, if we are to believe the novelist of today, for the purpose of studying for the stage. She did not take her husband into her confidence, but simply disappeared without leaving even a message behind.

The author has not written the usual story about a stage-struck girl or wife, but it is so original in its setting and so appealing in its style that it is an unusually interesting story.

"Roles" will become one of the most popular romances of the summer—take it with you on your vacation whether it be spent in the mountains or at the seashore. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

WHY I WROTE "NONE SO BLIND."

By Albert Parker Fitch.

This is a tale of Cambridge, when the seniors scorned the antique Yale, and the halls for freshmen were a thing unknown. Every youth might flock by himself, might play or study, sin or suffer, live or die alone, right from bloody Monday night to commencement day. Hence one offers the tale, with half humorous misgivings, to a generation that launches freshmen with the earnest talk and warm ice cream of three successive receptions, that houses them in a communal luxury which makes the "stairs" and common rooms of ancient universities across the seas look mean and small.

Only if contrasts enhance values, or distance lends amusement to the view, can the life recorded here interest the undergraduates of this hour.

"Why write the tale?"

Well, this is why. Underneath and beside these currents ran lives which were foredoomed to fail in this first struggle with their peers, so blunt and clumsy were the tools fate had thrust into their unaccustomed hands. Here are the bewildered and unhappy, the aggressive and unpleasant youth, sometimes vicious always innocent; they who stumble towards the light and fight unhelped or hindered by the nice regard for the others' self protective rules. These, too, have their place in the sharp and crude diversities of college life, and it is of them, the unnoticed and obscure, my tale is spun.

WHY I WROTE "CROOKED LANES."

By Rupert Sargent Holland.

I met at dinner a man with an international reputation as an explorer, one who had lived for several years among saage tribes of the Amazon. He was a very shy, reserved fellow and seemed to find civilized America less attractive than the wilds of Brazil. I thought it would be interesting to make such a man, rich, accustomed to physical hardships and perils, but diffident among people of his own class, the target of a band of criminal conspirators, who should use his reputation for fearlessness and his actual shyness to hoodwink his neighbors and rob them.

If a man like this explorer should find himself involved in such a net of intrigue, how would he avenge himself on his enemies? What would he do, moreover, if he fell in love with a woman who was also caught in the toils of the conspirators? These questions fascinated me, and I set to work to supply the answers in my novel, "Crooked Lanes," which has for its hero—and also in a sense its villain—my friend the explorer, who considered the aboriginal people of Brazil pleasanter company than his so-called civilized white neighbors.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

An Outline of Municipal Government.

Readings in Municipal Government. By Chester C. Maxey, who is head of the political science department at Western Reserve university, Cleveland, Ohio, and is a well-known authority on the subject of municipal government.

The first volume gives an interesting statement of the great problem of municipal government, social, financial and political.

The second volume presents many important sources of information and reproduces a number of the results of research. It contains valuable material for the study of municipal affairs such as city charters and surveys, of the reports that are issued by the cities themselves. (Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

Representative Government in Industry. By James Meyers, executive secretary, board of operatives, Dutchess Bleachery, Inc. This volume is an inside story of the actual workings of "industrial democracy" in many plants which know not from hearsay but from actual work. The book contains information that will be of interest to owners and managers, organized labor, religious thinkers, and students of social science and government. (George H. Doran Co., New York.)

Roosevelt Prophet of Unity. By Herman Hagedorn. "Strive for Unity We must be united. If we are not united we shall slip into the gulf of measureless disaster"—Roosevelt. The writer's motive in contributing this little volume to the people is to appeal to all Americans to "fight for the basic element of democratic government." (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.

The author of a popular book makes a host of friends, who, in many cases, are unable to gratify fully their interest in him by consulting the meager data given in "Who's Who." Some publishers have performed a real service to such readers by printing booklets about their best-known authors. The following booklets, attractively printed, give a more comprehensive account of the several authors and their books than can elsewhere be obtained between two covers; they will be sent by Little, Brown & company, Boston, Mass., free of charge, to all who write for them:

Cosmo Hamilton: The Man.

A. S. M. Hutchinson: Personal Recollections.

Jeffery Farnol: Master of Romantic Fiction.

Edison Marshall: The Man and His Books.

My Books and Myself, by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Bertrand W. Sinclair: The Man and His Books.

"Another Scandal," by Cosmo Hamilton, has been made into a motion picture by E. H. Griffith, starring Lois Wilson. It will be released on June 22. Still another is "The Last Frontier," by Courtney Ryley Cooper. The biggest scenes, including a stampede by ten thousand buffalo, have already been filmed.

The title of Stephen McKenna's new novel is "The Commandment of Moses." The commandment of Moses it refers to is the twenty-fourth verse of the twenty-second chapter of Deuteronomy. It gives a penalty for one of the "Thou shalt nots" of the Ten Commandments.

CURRENT MAGAZINES.

The Antiquarian. A monthly magazine for the collector of antiques, works of arts and rarities. The cover design carries a very attractive picture of a fan of the Louis Fifteenth period. Another is a picture of Hepplewhite dining room furniture from the Pendleton collection. This number is filled with many different designs of plate, rugs and pictures. The magazine is published by Esther Singleton, editor, Eighth avenue, New York.

May and June Numbers of "Poetry"—a magazine of verse edited by Harriet Monroe, are among the best ever published. The leading poem in the May issue is "People" by Marion Strobel; "The Return" by Eda Lou Walton, and other real poetry writers and lovers. Whitman said "To have poets, there must be great audiences, too. The June issue contains "Reverberations" by Marjorie Allen Seiffert; "Waiting" by Dorothy Richardson; "Out of the West" by Mary Carolyn Davies, with other attractive poems and comments by popular and talented authors.

Current History for the month of June gives its readers a sixteen-page four-color section of the "Secrets and Splendors of the Tomb of Tutankhamen." "The Explorations at the Tomb," by Howard Carter; "Discoveries at the Tomb," "The Story of Presidential Nominating Conventions," by Cordell Hull, chairman democratic national committee; "'Backward' Peoples Under the Mandate System;" "The Political Methods of American and British Feminists," by Anne Martin, former chairman national woman's party; "The Passing of the Socialist Party." There are several other very interesting articles with a symposium by several prominent representatives of the great university which will be of special value to all men and women—"Assessing the Blame of the World War."

Ben Lyon deserts Hollywood temporarily for New York. He returns in a few weeks to be featured probably in "If Ever I Marry Again." This is a screen adaptation of a recently published magazine story of the same title.

Conway Tearle is doing another screen play of stage life. His latest was "The White Moth" with Barbara LaMarr. His new one is "Temperament," a First National picture in which he is to be cofeatured with Colleen Moore.

MISS BONNIE TE BEAU HODGES' LEADING LADY

(At the Forsyth.)

There were a lot of dry and very uninteresting textbooks on algebra and Latin; a prim school marm with exacting rules and regulations for the girl students in her boarding school and another winter of chapel and study periods for Miss Bonnie Te-Beau to look forward to about four years ago when a musical troupe played the small town in Virginia where she was reared.

MISS BONNIE TE BEAU.

Now Miss TeBeau was not unduly adventurous for a girl in her 'teens, for the stage has forever been the fond dream of girlhood, and when she heard that the company had been bereft of one of the members of its cast and that the part must be filled before the show coud continue with its season's tour, she packed up her belongings, lock, stock and barrel, and in the most approved movie fashion stole away from the college in the dead of night and went out into the world to seek her fame.

The popularity she has gained in the two short weeks in Atlanta as the leading lady of the Jimmie Hodges musical comedy company at the Forsyth theater speaks loudly the success she has attained.

For two years she was on Broadway with one of the biggest musical comedy hits of the season. Bonnie (that's her first name) was here at the Atlanta in 1922, sharing honors for the lead with Lillian Young in "Tangerine"—musical hit.

Last year she was in vaudeville. Keith Big Time billed as Nuwn and TeBeau. Jimmie Hodges, who "picks 'em, then teaches 'em," lured her into his company, and she has been with his company ever since.

Miss TeBeau is a finished actress of the first water, but her greatest appeal is in the light, enjoyable musical productions, where her sparkling personality can find vent in her singing and dancing.

Odds and Ends

BY S. F. G.

Bonnie TeBeau, vivacious young leading woman of the Forsyth musical stock company, has one of the voices one just can't forget. Last week she received a basket of flowers with an utter stranger's card attached. It developed that the sender heard her sing two years ago over WGM, then The Constitution's radio broadcasting station, when the principals of the "Tangerine" company gave a late program during their engagement here. He did not know whose voice it was until he heard it again in "Honey Girl" last week.

"Blossom Time." last season's musical hit in Atlanta and further impressed in local interest because of the romance of its leading woman and a young Atlantan, is to be heard in South America this summer, which is winter in South America. The Shubert's have already enrolled a company to sing it in Spanish but the personnel has not been announced.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle is to make his first public appearance since the Rappe scandal when he attempts a skit of his own writing at Pantage's vaudeville theater in San Francisco, Monday. For the last year he has been directing Al St. John and Clyde Cook comedies for the Fox films, and keeping himself out of the public eye.

"Ponjola" at Alamo No. 2.

"Ponjola," a picturization of Cynthia Stockley's story of south African life, will be the feature attraction at Alamo No. 2 beginning Monday for a four-day engagement.

A vivid photoplay drama of a story which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan magazine and later was for months one of the "six best sellers," "Ponjola" is a stirring story of action and romance staged in the Rhodesian gold fields.

The play centers about an English noblewoman, an innocent victim of scandal who goes into the gold fields to lose her identity. She masqueraded as a man, and as such lives for months with the hardened characters of the veldt.

Anna Q. Nilsson, said by critics to be the best looking blonde now before the camera, has the most important role in "Ponjola." Her now famous $9,000 hair cut is the talk of two continents. Miss Nilsson received this sum before she would consent to part with her beautiful blond locks. Others prominently cast in this remarkable production are James Kirkwood, Joseph Kilgour and Tully Marshall.

He thinks he has been a good boy long enough to have earned forgiveness from the soft-hearted and short-memoried public.

Rodolph Valentino will not have to buy his hair oil on credit after he finishes the two photoplays he is making now for Famous Players-Lasky. The Australian movie magnate, Hugh D. McIntosh, has dated him up for his first of a new series of British empire pictures. The patent leather coiffure is to be shipped to England in August and to be seen on London screens during March.

Colleen Moore, who got her start in a barn loft theater on North Jackson street, a few seasons ago at a penny a copy, has won a new star for her crown in "The Perfect Flapper," just released by First National, coming soon to the Metropolitan. She is adorable enough to set any woman worrying, the Chicago Tribune said after the first showing.

Dorothy Stickney, stunning blonde ingenue of the Lyric players last winter, opens with the Barry Whitcomb Stock company in Lakewood, Maine, Monday.

Symona Boniface, who played a brief engagement as second woman with the Lyric players last year, moves to Los Angeles with the Alcazar company in "Polly Preferred" Monday. She has been playing with Genevive Tobin, in the travesty "Julio and Romyette."

Maria Jeritza is sounding her A in preparation for a summer swing across the continent from Montclair to San Francisco to get in trim for her winter concert engagement in Atlanta.

Los Angeles, having tipped the population scales at a million, considers itself rich enough to support a season of five grand opera performances in October. An association has put up a $35,000 guarantee but has not announced what grand opera company is going to work five performances for that amount.

Eugene O'Neill's much discussed play of miscegenation opened for a continuous run to New York's black and tan population last week. Mary Blair has the role of the white girl who marries a negro and goes insane when she realizes he is going to stay black. "All God's Chillun Got Wings" is the name of the piece; the Provincetown playhouse is sheltering it. It players will need wings if it ever leaves Manhattan.

Morris and Gest have slashed prices on "Sitting Pretty" at the Imperial theater to half the scale formerly in vogue just to demonstrate, they say, that all New York theaters are not going to try to gouge the visitors to the democratic national convention.

While coloring in nature is usually for a utilitarian purpose, the brilliant hues of feathers of birds are merely for decorating purposes just as are many of the colors worn by human beings, according to naturalists.

One curious calling is that of a New York woman who earns a living by pawning and redeeming the belongings of other women who are in need of ready cash, but do not like to be seen visiting the pawnshop. She collects a small percentage on each transaction.

WHEN exacting tastes, which command the best regardless of the cost, insist on having Maxwell House Coffee is it not striking evidence of unvarying goodness—of an unequalled flavor?

In the best coffee-growing countries we have coffee-buyers who uphold the standard of quality we have set. Meticulous care and matchless skill then create the taste that the nation calls "Good to the Last Drop."

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

Dr. and Mrs. Davis Honored by Friends

The silver wedding anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. E. C. Davis was an event of more than usual interest to them, their children and several hundred friends, who gathered at the Davis farm on North Side drive in the Mount Perrian road section Saturday afternoon. The members of the Emory unit, commanded by Dr. Davis when that company served overseas in the world war, the Fulton County Medical society and the staff of Davis-Fisher sanitarium arranged the surprise feature of the entertainment by motoring out to the farm where Dr. and Mrs. Davis had gone to spend the afternoon, and at 5 o'clock the orchestra sounded the notes of the wedding march from Lohengrin, and the eight children of the bride and groom of twenty-five Junes ago appeared in bridal array, advancing to the place which had secretly been arranged by the committee in charge, and escorted their parents before Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, pastor of the North Avenue Presbyterian church, of which these beloved Atlantans are members, who performed the ceremony uniting them to many more years of happiness and bliss.

Dr. E. C. Thrash presented an exquisite gift of silver, including platter, pitcher and one dozen goblets to Dr. and Mrs. Davis, his presentation speech couched in sentences which told of the affectionate regard in which they were held by their friends and associates. Other handsome gifts were received.

"I never thought of all that!"

"I wouldn't think of sending my family wash out to a washerwoman," said an Atlanta woman to a group of listeners at her club. "I have the washerwoman come to my house and do the clothes."

"That's just what I used to do, too," another woman replied. "That was before I began to use my laundry's family wash service, and I certainly never will go back to the old way again.

"If you ask me why, I'll tell you. First, I had to pay the washerwoman practically the same price my laundry charges. Then I had to buy soap, starch, blueing, pay for gas, and then give her two meals. That's one side of it, not to speak of the time and wear and tear on one's nerves."

"I never thought of all that," said the first lady, "next week I'll just call my Laundry."

Mrs. Nix Reads Excellent Paper To Mothers' Study Circle

The Mother's Study Circle of the Kirkwood P.-T. A. met at the home of Mrs. Hess on Wednesday, June 11, and elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Albert Nix; vice president, Mrs. John Bowen; secretary, Mrs. H. J. Barfield; treasurer, Mrs. Davis Hall; press chairman, Mrs. Kathleen Hess.

The subject for this meeting was "The Characteristics of the Pre-School Period."

Mrs. Albert Nix read the following paper, which should be helpful to every parent:

"For some time parents have realized the tremendous importance of infant welfare and also the health of the school child has received attention through the school organization. But the health and mental training of the pre-school child has been ignored and just now parents are beginning to realize that these are the most formative of all years. It is during these years that we must aid growth by providing right conditions and proper nourishment."

"Everyone knows that physical and mental nuture is the responsibility first of all of the home. No one else can take the place of the father and mother in nurturing the child and parents must make conscientious and thorough preparation, for it is a sacred responsibility as well as the greatest opportunity life offers us, and the most important factor in the development of every child is living in a home where the right environment is created from the beginning. During the early years the greatest characteristic the child possesses is the wonderful possibility for development, both physical and mental.

"The process of learning begins with birth and a very young baby is capable of being taught that it is useless to cry unless he is really suffering. If he learns that lesson in infancy he will be able to meet with disappointments and discouragements which come later on without crying and making a scene. Have you ever known a child who was spoiled? We all have. Did you try to discover why the child was spoiled? Very often the parents themselves are entirely to blame for they unwittingly participate in the development of the undesirable characteristics.

"A mother who gives her baby a small muslin rag with sugar and bread in it to keep the baby quiet so that she might not be annoyed is not only ruining the child's digestion, but is training it to expect to be bought off with treats whenever it is displeased and fretful. A child who is not spoiled has not usually just grown that way, but has probably been carefully trained. By the time the child is four and one-half or five its behavior is the result of habits already formed. The quickness of habit formation is a highly important characteristic and it is the mother's duty to see that only healthful habits are formed.

"If the parent practices self-control, never deceives the child, always keeps a promise, it will have a powerful influence in character building and the formation of good habits. One of the best ways to teach the child to be truthful is for the parents to practice it strictly themselves.

"Quite often a child of this age will admire a toy of his little playfellow and his tendency will be to take it home to play with it undisturbed. Maybe it will be only a wheel off a toy or maybe a little piece of pencil, but the mother should see to it that the child returns it immediately, no matter how small or insignificant it may appear. Great care should be taken to explain that it does not belong to him, and it must be restored to the rightful owner at once. In this way the foundation of honesty is laid.

"In my experience as a teacher I have seen a little child snubbed by other children who were better trained because it had taken home a piece of paper or crayon which belonged to another. With a little careful training during its pre-school years, this little child, who was probably neglected by an unconsciously careless mother, could have been saved this embarrassment and humiliation. The habit of obedience must be taught in the first two or three years of the child's life."

"Insist quietly but firmly upon complete obedience during this period and in time all idea of resisting parental authority will be given up completely. At first it may require patience and sympathy on the part of the parent, for by now, in the occasional conflict of wills, the child has discovered he has a will of his own and thinks he does not always have to submit to the will of his mother unless he wishes to do so. He learns he has a personality of his own. When this feeling of individuality comes it shows itself in the child's conduct. It does not come to all children at the same age. This phase of the child's development presents a most serious problem. Sometimes self-assertiveness assumes a very violent and unpleasant form. To deal helpfully with such a case a sympathetic understanding is necessary. To forcefully repress all efforts of self-assertiveness would cause the child to be weak-willed. On the other hand there is the danger of allowing the child, whose self-assertiveness is too prominent, to develop into a domineering, dictatorial, selfish person who will never be capable of making and holding friends because he has not been taught to respect the wishes of others.

"In training children a great many are spoiled in disposition and rendered weak in will power and self-control by parents foolishly yielding to all of their imagined wants. The child will fret and whine for a thing he wants and after the parent has positively refused in the beginning and has threatened and scolded, the child continues to fuss and beg until finally the parent yields, hoping the child will be satisfied and give her a little peace. Persistence, we see, is an important characteristic, but if used in the wrong way can be very harmful. When the child makes a request it should be given careful consideration and the answer the parent gives should be final.

"Do you sometimes wonder why young children love to pull their playthings to pieces? It is difficult to say just why they do this but children seem to enjoy feeling that they are doing something, making things happen. They are also very curious. These tendencies, curiosity and the desire to manipulate, are responsible for much of the child's conduct, leading them into a great deal of socalled naughtiness, but they are indispensable in their development. The power of imitation is also a characteristic necessary in their development. If mother reads the paper the child pretends to be reading. If mother writes a letter the child wants to write, too. He wants to imitate everyone and will probably enjoy repeating the performance again and again. This is a method of gaining experience.

"Did you ever see a child of two or three showing off? Did you realize that the showing off was as much the fault of the audience as of the actor? Young children are very susceptible to the approval or disapproval of older people and in the efforts to win their applause they frequently say foolish things and attempt to do smart things. This should never be encouraged. Parents often make the mistake of making the child the topic of their conversation and in his presence tell of his wonderful cuteness and superior knowledge. This gives the child a false impression of himself for he is probably just a normal child and the listener is usually bored.

"It is during this period that fears, likes and dislikes are acquired. The child reflects the emotional attitudes of those around him. During a thunder storm a mother is often afraid and in terror holds the child close to her and trembles. Probably in later years that child will never quite overcome his fear of storms. It would have been well worth the effort if the mother had suppressed her fears and amused the child in some way to keep it from being frightened.

"This is certainly the most favorable age to impress children with the stories of love and care of the heavenly Father and if we expect children to respect and obey the laws of their country and to love their country it must be taught at the mother's knee.

"In training our children we must study the characteristics that aid in developing good habits and the right way of living and discourage or suppress any harmful characteristic.

"However, if we expect to hold their love and respect we must be patient and just in our dealings with them and lead exemplary lives before them."

Prominent Atlantans Pictured In Oglethorpe University Group

The recent gift made by Mrs. Bettye Keenan Boyd of the magnificent silver loving cup to Oglethorpe university through the woman's board was in honor of the champion baseball team of 1924.

This was formally presented by Mrs. Boyd at the recent banquet at the Capitol City club, given by a group of friends of the university in honor of the winning team. In presenting the cup Mrs. Boyd said: "This cup is filled and overflows with love from the woman's board to each and every member of our baseball team."

The last meeting of the woman's board of Oglethorpe university, held recently at the university, was a fitting climax to the most successful year in the history of the organization.

One of the outstanding features of the year's work was the ready response on the part of the women in the recent campaign for the university, the following ladies contributing $1,000 each: Mrs. C. K. Ayer, Mrs. Bettye K. Boyd, Mrs. G. H. Brandon, Mrs. C. A. Conklin, Mrs. J. M. High, Mrs. Corra Harris, Mrs. Thornwell Jacobs, Mrs. Albert Thornton, Sr., and Mrs. James Thompson Williams.

In addition to this, handsome portraits of General James Edward Oglethorpe and Lady Elizabeth Oglethorpe, together with a copy of the famous picture depicting the trial of Thomas Bambridge, were given by Mrs. J. M. High, at a cost of over $1,000. These were presented to the university through the woman's board.

Mrs. H. G. Carnes, Mrs. A. L. Milligan and Mrs. H. M. Nicholes' work for the campaign in no way curtailed the general activities of the board. The care of the campus has always been the first consideration of the board, and this work has been splendidly handled by the chairman, Mrs. E. Rivers.

Perhaps the greatest activity of the board is the sponsoring of the annual production of the Oglethorpe Players, Mrs. Cheston King being the efficient chairman.

Publicity and program advertising is handled by Mrs. H. G. Carnes.

Decorations for all social events in connection with the university are in charge of Mrs. G. H. Brandon.

Mrs. James Thompson Williams has entire charge of the hospital.

Mrs. Isaac Schoen, athletic chairman, made a special contribution toward the purchase of the gold baseballs given to the baseball team at the recent dinner.

At the last meeting the nominating committee, composed of Mrs. George Brine, chairman, Mrs. G. H. Brandon and Mrs. E. Rivers, brought in the following ticket for the new officers who were unanimously elected:

Mrs. Katherine Connerat, who has just completed a most efficient term, was reelected president; Mrs. Albert Thornton, Sr., first vice president; Mrs. Charles A. Conklin, second vice president; Mrs. J. M. High, third vice president; Mrs. Cheston King, fourth vice president; Mrs. W. A. Spere, fifth vice president; Mrs. I. R. Carlyle, recording secretary; Mrs. Earle D'Arcy Pearce, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Omar Elder, treasurer.

Aside from the special gifts to the campaign about $13,000 was raised by the woman's committee, with Mrs. Cheston King as chairman.

Mrs. Connerat has been assembling the new executive committee and takes pleasure in announcing the following chairmen: Mrs. J. K. Ottley, chairman; Mrs. Charles A. Conklin, vice chairman; Mrs. C. K. Ayer, chairman endowment; Mrs. George Brine, chairman advisory board; Mrs. Haynes McFadden, first vice chairman; Mrs. B. K. Boyd, second vice chairman; Mrs. Victor Kriegshaber, Mrs. H. G. Carnes, Mrs. E. P. McBurney, Mrs. Lee Ashcraft, Mrs. E. H. Phillips, Mrs. Gordon Burnett, chairman girls' committee; Mrs. E. D. Crane, membership; Mrs. G. H. Brandon, decoration; Mrs. Cheston King, players; Mrs. John Cooper, music; Mrs. E. Rivers, grounds; Mrs. Isaac Schoen, athletics; Mrs. J. T. Williams, hospital; Mrs. Wesley Peacock, library; Mrs. A. L. Milligan, commencement day; Mrs. Thomas Brumby, Marietta group; Mrs. Jones Yow, Norcross group. Honorary presidents—Mrs. Thornwell Jacobs, Mrs. Harry P. Hermance, Mrs. J. T. Lupton, Mrs. Samuel Inman and Mrs. James A. Gray, Sr.

P.-T. A. Council President Issues First Message To Members

Mrs. George Howsmon, newly-elected president of the Atlanta Parent-Teacher council, issues first message to the members of the council:

"As your newly elected president of the Atlanta council P.-T. A., the first thing which I feel I should bring to your attention is the necessity of registering at the city hall in the office of the city clerk.

"Those of us who registered in the office of the tax collector at the Fulton county courthouse before the primary which was held on March 19 thought we were qualified to vote in any election which might come up during the year of 1924. In fact, we were told that it would not be necessary for us to have any further concern about the matter of registering, but there has since that time arisen a question about the legality of the city registration list, and hence, as we are to vote on in September a mayor, half the councilmen, all the heads of departments (except the superintendent of the waterworks) and no doubt some important charter amendments directly affecting our schools, it is doubly important that the parent-teacher women should register.

"Allow me to urge you to register now, because the city primary has been set for September 25, and it will be so easy for us to put off the matter of registering until we get back from our summer trips, and it may be that we will then discover that the registration books are closed and we are not qualified to vote in the important elections. The law says that persons voting in the city primary must be registered 30 days before the election, and that will mean that we cannot vote unless we are registered before August 25. Now perhaps you will say: 'I have never had to register at the city hall before. Why must I register there now? And if my taxes are paid, am I not on the permanent registration list?' Last summer the legislature passed an amendment to our city charter requiring all voters in city elections to register with the city clerk, and that is why you are having to do it this year and not before this time. As to the permanent registration list, so long as you keep your state and county taxes paid up on time (the time is between the first of October and the 19th of December), you are automatically registered for the state and county elections, but you must register each year in person for the city elections. Therefore, if you have not registered this year at the city hall, do so at once if you wish to be sure of being able to vote in September.

"Just now the school affairs of our city call for the efforts of the best minds, and for the viewpoint of those most vitally concerned. Let us study the problem in its relation to the rest of the government, leaving out prejudice and personalities."

Moore, the chairman of this work, has the prize essays read at the meeting. Much appreciation of the prize essays was expressed.

Another interesting feature of the program was the charming and helpful talk by Mrs. Ladie Bowling, of Montgomery, Ala. Mrs. Bowling is one of five national vice presidents of Service Star Legion, and her work has been in the south. The National Service Star Legion has no paid officers or workers.

Camping Heads List of Camp Fire Girls' Summer Activities

Summer activities for the Atlanta Camp Fire Girls comprises a list of attractions from which each girl may choose for her pastime during the coming months of vacation and warm weather. Camping, which tops the list of summer activities, will be succeeded by a scheduled program of regular events to be put on at Camp Fire headquarters, 415 Chamber of Commerce, from June 23 to September 1. This program will be open to every Camp Fire Girl of the city who registers in advance for the various activities. Registration may be made by calling headquarters, Walnut 3577, and giving names of girl and the phase of the program she wishes to enjoy.

On Monday mornings at 10 o'clock handicraft classes will be held at headquarters. Instruction will be offered in reed basketry, tye-dying, gessor, wood block printing, the making of parchment shades, and interior decoration.

Tuesday afternoons will feature a camera club. Photography is recognized in Camp Fire to such an extent that provision is made at national headquarters for the giving of honors in the art of making pictures. The girls of Atlanta will find both fun and profit in the camera club.

Overnight hikes will be held on Wednesday. The girls will leave their starting point at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, hike to a suitable place for spending the night, cook supper out-of-doors, study the stars and tell stories about camp fires. They will return home the next morning. These hikes are always well chaperoned; oilcloth sheets or ponchos are carried along to sleep on so that the girls are safeguarded against dampness and the chance of catching cold.

A mandolin club will constitute the attraction for Friday. Camp Fire Girls who are musically inclined will find a place for themselves in this club that will eventually grow and assume the dignity of an orchestra. Any Camp Fire Girl who can play on any musical instrument is eligible for membership in the mandolin club.

This schedule will be repeated weekly, and other activities will be added as demands for them arise.

Loraine Bernard, Lyric Player, And Her Beautiful Clothes

MISS LORAINE BERNARD.

BY FRANCES BEMIS.

"Lovely woman is like a poem.
And when in garments nobly planned
She is indeed a dream."

So ran the lilting refrain of Rankin Mansfield's song in "Irene," the delightful musical comedy presented by the Lyric Players some weeks past. And one could not but wonder if the lines of the song had not been particularly composed to describe Lorraine Bernard, that fascinating actress of the Lyric group, whose charm and appearance are a constant delight to Atlanta audiences.

Lorraine Bernard's art is unquestioned. Her flashing eyes and winning smile have won her countless admirers. But it is Lorraine Bernard's clothes that are remembered long after the show is over and it is these intriguing creations which furnish absorbing interest and unceasing conversation wherever Atlanta's feminine aggregation is assembled. Over the teacups and bridge tables mention of the latest gown worn by this popular actress is enough to start a chorus of exclamations. Many a modiste called upon to copy a gown worn by Lorraine Bernard has perhaps sighed despairing over her task, and undoubtedly there are Atlanta merchants who have been called upon unsuccessfully to produce apparel similar to that worn by Miss Bernard who have wondered where she obtained her costumes and the accessories which their customers demand and which they cannot procure.

Miss Bernard Interviewed.

We decided, therefore, to seek this young woman out and learn from her, if possible, who her couturier might be and from whence come the beautiful gowns, hats, slippers, wraps, bags and other adornment that produce such envy, admiration and despair in feminine Atlanta hearts.

We found her backstage following a rehearsal, going over some lines with her director. Having heard that actresses were usually a dowdy lot out of the play, we had expected to be somewhat disillusioned as to her apperance away from the footlights. Instead, she was stunningly gowned in a black and white affair that might just have been taken out from its tissue wrappings. We inquired if this had been a dress rehearsal and when informed that the Lyric Players do not have dress rehearsals, we marveled indeed that even at a tiresome rehearsal Miss Bernard was the same exquisitely attired person.

"Are you always 'dressed up'?" we inquired as she led the way into her dressing room. "No, indeed," she promptly replied. "You should see me at home in a bungalow apron. Outside of the theater, my chief interest is keeping house and I prepare my own meals and do the housework in my apartment." She then inquired if we liked kidney stew. "That is one of the favorite dishes I prepare, and if you will visit me some time, I'll serve you kidney stew in a bungalow apron and you'll realize what a plain, every-day sort of person I am."

She then started a runnig fire of conversation on how to prepare kidney stew, spaghetti, broiled steak and other delectable dishes of which she is very fond. She discussed her charming little apartment and how she planned her housekeeping in a systematic manner so as not to interfere with her work as an actress.

But she was diverging from the subject we were anxious to discuss. "Tell us about your clothes," we insisted. "Do they all come from Paris, or have you a designer in New York who fashions them for you?"

Designs Own Clothes.

"I design and superintend the making of practically every gown and hat I wear," was the answer.

The secret was out. We could only gasp in admiration.

"But surely you get your ideas from Paris?"

"I was in Paris just before coming to Atlanta and of course I brought back a number of gowns especially designed for me. But these were soon rendered useless as I only wear a gown once in the same city, and since then I have been designing my own costumes, even to my hats, bags and wraps. I have a very talented Atlanta girl, Miss Gladys Reid, who stays at my apartment each day and works on my costumes. I have trained her to the point now that I can tell her the kind of gown I want, and she does the rest, with a few suggestions from me. The first thing when I am given a script to read I think of the gowns I should wear and visualize them in my mind. Then I draw the designs. The next day I am in the stores looking for material which I take back to Miss Reid to make up for me. The result, the 'Paris' gown which you mention.

"Proper costuming is of deepest interest to me. I study the character I am to assume and suit the gown to that character. I also discuss with Miss Lowe, the leading lady, and the other actresses, the color of the gowns they will wear so that mine will not clash with theirs. If we did not consult on this point we might all appear on the opening night in brown, or green, or black, and you can imagine what a catastrophe that would be!

"I like up-to-the-minute styles, but I do not try to wear clothes that are just fads. They must be distinctive. I never wear low-heeled shoes or large, floppy hats."

Holds Auction Sales.

After a glance over Miss Bernard's dressing room, with its myriad of garments on racks, shelf after shelf of shoes and boxes piled with hats, all of which, according to her own statement, could only be used once, we wondered what she did with her gowns after they were worn.

"I seldom wear a gown or hat on the street that I have worn in a play. This does not apply to shoes, which are less conspicuous. Some of them I send on to my friends who are on the stage in other cities. Last year I held an auction sale in the Hudson theater at Union Hill, New York, where I was playing, and sold many of my gowns for $15 and $20 that had cost me $100 and more. There was a perfect scramble for these and it was great fun to watch the eager expression of the women as they walked away with my gown and hats."

And here's just a hint. Miss Bernard intimated that if she remained in Atlanta much longer she would be forced to hold another auction sale of clothes here. She is constantly sending boxes of them to her New York apartment, which she has maintained ever since she has been in Atlanta. "But my maid there writes me," she declared, "that if I do not soon stop sending them there will not be any more space for storage."

Small of Stature.

Miss Bernard is much smaller than she appears on the stage. She dresses for many of her roles with the idea of appearing tall, whereas she is only of medium height. Her hair is luxuriant and naturally curly and she has worn it bobbed since Irene Castle started the fad in New York. "And I'm not bald-headed yet," she laughingly declared. She is a very dainty though very wholesome person. And here's another secret. She is really more beautiful off the stage than on. Her whole being radiates health and charm and she talks in a spontaneous, enthusiastic fashion that is most winning. She's a very energetic person, too, as attested by her statement that she rises every morning at 7 o'clock, exercises for a half-hour, and then is busily engaged during the entire day until after the evening performance, when she hasn't a thing to do but study until 1 o'clock.

But we still can't picture Miss Bernard in that bungalow apron.

Miss Martin Urges Gathering of Relics.

Miss Lillie Martin, of Hawkinsville, chairman of relics for the Georgia division, asks Georgia Daughters of the Confederacy to devote particular attention to collecting relics during the summer months when much other work is suspended. Miss Martin further asks that every chapter write her full accounts of the relics secured in order that proper provision may be made for the exhibit of relics which will prove a specially valuable feature of the next state convention if Georgia Daughters give the proper aid in securing these mementoes of the past. Their ultimate destination is a room in the solid rock of Stone Mountain. This room will be hollowed out of the mountain and will be for the preservation of the records of the past. Many relics will be sent to Richmond and placed in the Georgia room until their final resting places, a fireproof home of rock, is made ready.

That Georgia will have a splendid showing of relics at Stone Mountain when the Confederate memorial is completed is insured by the appointment of Miss Lillie Martin to this important work, the record of achievement of the Hawkinsville chapter under Miss Martin's leadership justifying this expectation.

To Whiten Skin with Lemon

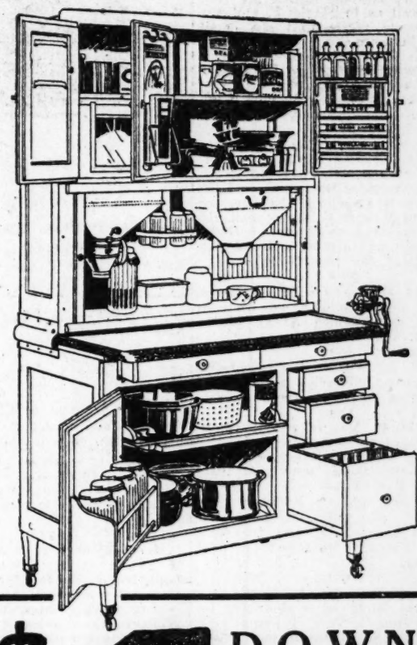

The only harmless way to bleach the skin white is to mix the juice of two lemons with three ounces of Orchard White, which any druggist will supply for a few cents. Shake well in a bottle, and you have a whole quarter-pint of the most wonderful skin whitener, softener and beautifier.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon bleach into the face, neck, arms and hands. It can not irritate. Famous stage beauties use it to bring that clear, youthful skin and rosy-white complexion; also as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. You must mix this remarkable lotion yourself. It can not be bought ready to use because it acts best immediately after it is prepared.

Important Recommendations Made by Mrs. T. G. Winter

Many important recommendations were made by Mrs. Thomas G. Winter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the biennial in Los Angeles. These recommendations are made by each outgoing president to the incoming administration, as a sort of legacy of hard-won experience.

Lecture Bureau.

One recommendation suggested that the General Federation of Women's Clubs establish a bureau of its own from which clubs throughout the country can secure information regarding speakers, especially American speakers.

Mrs. Winter feels that the women's clubs are being exploited by lecture bureaus, who charge a large fee and who give to the clubs those speakers whom they regard as a bureau asset.

"Many of those lecturers are foreigners," says Mrs. Winter. "They come to these thinking, educated women and address them as if they were ignorant little children. We want the foreigners' viewpoint, and enjoy particularly many of their literary lectures, but we have hundreds of fine American speakers throughout our states who know American problems and can lecture on them in a way to clarify our own viewpoint."

Mrs. Winter's idea is to have each state send to the central bureau clear, succinct information regarding its own lecturers who are valuable to women's clubs, and have the bureau act as a clearing house and a well of information.

Jewish Organizations.

"Jewish organizations should be considered as racial and not as religious," said Mrs. Winter, referring to one of the new departures of the membership committee, which admits to federation those Jewish women's organizations which have no religious tests for membership.

Among other recommendations—these all are suggestions and not mandatory—are that the federation shall hold no membership in other organizations over whose policies the federation has no control, and that it shall not permit its name or indorsement to be used by any other organization.

"Frequently these other organizations are doing work of which we approve and are really taking part in," said Mrs. Winter; "but it has been our experience that if we lend our name to a really laudable movement, we run the danger of having it used later for something with which we want nothing to do."

It is also suggested that the federation shall not be used in any way for solicitation of funds for any purpose other than its own, but that it give adequate publicity to the needs of other organizations.

Public Measures.

Clubs and organizations of clubs in the federation are advised to hold completely aloof from partisan politics, but to unite on such public measures as club women can agree on—such as child labor, etc., which are above partisan politics. "Our federation should choose its policies as a matter of conviction, and not from any pressure brought upon it," says Mrs. Winter, "and therefore we must guard ourselves against the constant solicitation of other organizations for support."

Important to the districts of state federations is Mrs. Winter's recommendation that the presidents of these districts be recognized as members of the delegate body, be put upon the free list for the general federation bulletin, and in similar ways be given their due importance in the federation strata. Many of these districts are as large as states and do important work, and Mrs. Winter feels they are an asset not to be overlooked.

It is also uggested that elections be held in such a way as to have a uniformity between the clubs and federations and the general federation, as this will save a year-around confusion, owing to the present scattered methods of election—a different time, length of term, etc., for almost every group in the federation.

University Summer School Will Open Twenty-First Session June 23

The twenty-first annual session of the University summer school will commence on June 23 and continue through August 22. Never in the history of the school has there been brighter prospects for attendance and it is believed that the enrollment will exceed that of last year which was two thousand.

Cooperating with the summer school authorities to make the session a success and to encourage the largest attendance the school has ever had, the officials of the city, county chamber of commerce, corporations, business and professional men and the general public are exercising every possible effort to make the 1924 session the banner session of the school. With all of these agencies actively engaged in the support of the school, the results are bound to be gratifying and the term a successful one.

The school is officered by Dr. Charles M. Snelling, dean of the University of Georgia; Dr. Andrew M. Soule, president of the state college of agriculture; Dr. J. M. Pound, president of the state normal school; Chancellor David C. Barrow, chancellor of the University of Georgia, and Dr. J. S. Stewart, director. Dr. Stewart is actively in charge of the direction of the school and under his able management the university summer school has out-ranked all others in the south.

Strong Faculty.

The faculty is made up from the pick of educators and entertainers of the country. Many of them are connected with the University of Georgia, but there is quite a number from this and other states. The work given here meets every requirement for those who desire preparation for degrees. It is a recognized institution, has become a ranking school among the summer schools of the nation.

In 1903 the state made the first appropriation for its support and since that time the members of the council have carried on the work, though stinted, to a remarkably successful degree. Year by year it has grown in importance until the present time when it is outranking many of the older institutions of the south both in attendance and in curriculum.

The action of the municipality, county and chamber of commerce urging and requesting the girls and women of the state to attend the approaching session is an indication of the interest which the people of Athens has for the student body. It is a general welcome and a sincere one which all are invited to accept and make Athens home, for at least the period of the summer school session.

The summer school is offering eight courses in law this year. These courses are open to students who have not completed fifteen units in the high school. In September only those who have completed the high school and fifteen hours in college may register in the law school. In September, 1925, only those who have completed two years in college or 30 hours may register in the law school. It will be seen, therefore, that by registering in the law department on June 23 students may complete the law course in three years. The requirement for one and two years of pre-law college work does not go into effect, until September. Many mature students, therefore, that cannot well afford the extra year in college should register this summer for their law work.

High School Certification.

The present high school licenses will remain in force until they expire. Holders of these should begin this summer to meet the requirements for converting these into state high school certificates—provisional or professional, normal or college. Fill out state department certificate blank and find out from the superintendent what you will need. A high school teacher as the old license expires must have two years of college or normal work (30 hours) beyond graduation from a four year high school. For a professional certificate these 30 hours must include nine hours in education, (18 semester hours). As at present, in a senior accredited high school emphasis will be put upon the 4 year college graduate. To secure a state professional college certificate the applicant must show college graduation and 9 hours (18 semester hours) of professional work.

If he is a graduate and has not taken the nine hours in education, he should take four hours this summer, secure a provisional certificate and complete his nine hours next summer, converting his provisional into a professional certificate, good for seven years.

The high school certificates, where possible, will also show in what subject the applicant has specialized to teach. The teacher will be granted a certificate and if he has majored or specialized in English, or history, or mathematics, or sciences or modern languages, or Latin, etc., that is, if he has made particular study of some of these in college and summer school with courses in the methods of teaching these, so that he is especially fitted to teach these, he will be granted on his high school certificate special mention of these subjects.

There are all the necessary courses in agriculture for those preparing for positions in vocational agriculture. Applicants should advise with Mr Paul Chapman or Mr. Wheeler of the agricultural college.

For teachers of Latin we are offering four courses particularly designed for teachers of the four-year Latin course in high schools. Rapid reading of Latin authors, Latin writing, methods of teaching Latin, teacher's course in Cicero or teacher's course in Virgil. These courses will be taught by Professor Hooper.

For the teachers of English we offer Shakespeare and the study of poetry by Dr. Park, the New England masters, the southern writers and problems in writing prose by Professor Simmons of Brenau; high school English, present tendencies in fiction, advanced English grammar, high school journalism by Dr. Sanford; a week's special lectures by Dr. C. Alphonso Smith of the naval academy; the Greek drama by Dr. Bocock, and all the courses in public speaking by Mr. McCabe of the Emerson school, Miss Cobb and Miss Vance. Here is an unsurpassed offering for our English teachers. Then there are the courses in teacher-librarian work.

For teachers of home economics we offer ten courses, meeting the needs of teachers of these subjects, with Misses Newton, E. Creswell, M. Creswell, Rathbone, Campbell, Proctor and Carpenter in charge. Vocational home economics, institutional organization and management, preparation for agent's work, and junior and senior credits are offered.

For teachers of history we offer a number of courses by Dr. McPherson, in American history and government, in European history by Professor Payne, junior high school social studies by Miss Schweppe, of the Lincoln school, New York, and the world war and its consequences by Dr. Bocock.

For teachers of mathematics the summer school offers courses by Dr. Messick, of Emory; Dr. Barrow, of Georgia; Dr. Dumas, Dr. Snelling and Superintendent Bennett.

In modern languages the teachers will find Professor Adolphe Vermont, a graduate of Louvaine university and of Johns Hopkins, now professor of modern languages in Converse college, giving courses in French; Mr. Chance, offering courses in Spanish, and Professor Morris in German.

In the sciences, teachers of these subjects are offered work in botany, genetics, by Dr. Reade; zoology and the teaching of biology by Dr. Krafka; physics, by Drs. Hendren and Dixon; general science, by Professor Earnest.

Five ladies will give instruction in physical training for women. The usual school has one instructor. The coaches of Georgia, Auburn, Tech and Alabama will give six-week courses in football, baseball, track, basketball and all allied subjects. This is unquestionably the most complete school of physical training offered by a southern institution. High school coaches are already registered from Louisiana, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama and Georgia. We are expecting over 100 school coaches.

Then there is the government riding school under the instruction of Major Burch, U. S. A., with sixty government well-trained cavalry horses. We have on the university property a beautiful bridle path, five miles in extent, through the woods and along the river.

In music the summer school offers unsurpassed advantages. We have the Granberry music school of New York city, giving its summer courses here, thus saving to our southern music teachers over half to three-fourths the expense of a summer in New York. To appreciate this department one must write for the Special Music Bulletin.

The oratory and dramatic art department is greatly enlarged this year with Miss Carolyn Cobb, of Atlanta; Miss Carolyn Vance, of the State Normal school; Francis J. McCabe, of the Emerson school, Boston, Mass., and Mr. Tripp, director of the Emerson summer school.

There are many teachers of expression in our high schools. We have brought to their doors the best to be had for their improvement.

There is complete interchange of work and credit between the work done here and at Emerson school. Think of it: Four Emerson teachers and graduates at your service six weeks for less than the railroad fare would be to Boston.

But the teachers will be saying, how can we make the nine hours in education required for high school professional certificate? We have not forgotten you in planning the summer school courses. You saw above what was planned for the elementary teachers.

For the high school teachers the following college courses in education are available this summer:

There are three courses in Principles of Secondary Education, Character Education and Educational Hygiene by Dean W. D. Furry, of Shorter college, and a graduate of Johns Hopkins; Professor William Parton, Jr., of Columbia, recommended by Dr. Kilpatrick, will give courses in Classroom Management and Educational Psychology; Superintendent Sidney L. Harden, of Columbia, now a member of the Texas survey, will offer four courses, Organization and Administration of Secondary Education, the School Principal, School Administration and Supervision, and the Junior High School. Dean T. J. Woofter will offer courses in Educational Sociology; Dean Ritchie, in Rural Education; Professor Sell, in Rural Sociology, and Dr. Hutcheson, in Sociology. Then there are the nine courses in the teaching of special subjects, which were so popular last year. English, Mr. Sanford; History, Mr. Payne; Social Sciences Miss Schewppe; Mathematics, Mr. Messick; Physics, Mr. Hendren; Biological Sciences, Mr. Krafka; Latin, Mr. Hooper; Romance Languages Mr. Vermont; German, Mr. Morris. Dr. A. E. Winshin and Dr. William H. Kilpatrick will each lecture to the teachers.—Banner-Herald.

Mrs. Hays Called 'Federation Beauty' In Los Angeles

Mrs. James E. Hays, of Montezuma, who was called the beauty of the federation, was unanimously elected recording secretary of the general federation at the biennial held in Los Angeles, Cal., last week.

The Evening Herald of Los Angeles in a recent issue had the following to say of Mrs. Hays:

"Georgia is going to try to hang its 'peach' on the topmost bough of the general federation. In other words, the "beauty of the federation," Mrs. James Hays, recording secretary, may at the next biennial become 'the beautiful president of the federation.'

"Mrs. Hays comes from Georgia, the state of peaches, and she looks like one herself. She has held every possible office in her own club at Montezuma, as well as holding the presidency of the Georgia federation for an unprecedented length of time.

"When her state nominated her to succeed herself as recording secretary—she is unopposed—they wanted to nominate her for the presidency, and even considered springing her as a 'dark horse' candidate here next Tuesday, when nominations from the floor will be in order. But Mrs. Hays refused—but she probably will not refuse years from now, unless in the meantime she becomes governor of Georgia!

"It may sound revolutionary to predict a woman governor for a southern state, but the clubwomen there are already campaigning for her nomination and Mrs. Hays refuses to say 'yes' or 'no' until she is home again and considers the situation.

"She is a member of all the distinguished organizations of women, from the D. A. R.'s to the Mayflower society, with an ancestry that looks like an American peerage. And one of her grandfathers, Dr. Benjamin F. Keene, was a California 49'er, who organized the first California medical societny and was its first president in 1856. Mrs. Hays will visit his grave at Placerville en route to Georgia."

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, director for Georgia in the General Federation of Women's clubs, who assumed her official title at the biennial held at Los Angeles, Calif., the first two weeks in June. Mrs. Richardson succeeds Mrs. Samuel M. Inman, whose term expired by limitation at the post-biennial session of the executive board of the G. F. W. C.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, director of Georgia in the General Federation of Women's Clubs, succeeds Mrs. Samuel Inman, whose term of office expired by limitation at the post-biennial session of the executive board held in Los Angeles. Mrs. Richardson was elected at the 1924 convention of the Georgia federation and brings to her office large experience derived from both state and national work of previous years. As chairman of the division of citizenship training in the general federation, Mrs. Richardson won national honors, being highly commended by such publications as the Woman's Home Companion for her initiative in pointing the way to saner and more wholesome celebrations of the Fourth of July. The program put on in Atlanta under Mrs. Richardson's sponsorship won first prize in a contest for the best program offered by a clubwoman for a citizenship celebration of the Fourth, and was advocated for general use throughout the United States by Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, past president of the federation and chairman of the department of American citizenship.

American Citizenship.

During the administration of Mrs. James E. Hays as president of the Georgia federation, Mrs. Richardson was chairman of the department of American citizenship for the state and organized a progressive and outstanding department. In recognition of the accomplishments of Mrs. Richardson in better films work she was accorded the honor of representing Georgia as an alternate on the committee of twenty created by Will H. Hays, head of the motion picture producers of America, and cited by the Hays office for her remarkable influence on the bettering of motion pictures.

Mrs. Richardson is chairman of the children's code commission of Georgia and her work for child welfare has long been of outstanding value.

As president of the fifth district of the Georgia federation, during the strenuous days of the world war, Mrs. Richardson successfully led that important body in many undertakings, and during the past year Mrs. Richardson was president of the Atlanta Woman's club, the largest individual organization in Georgia.

Better Films President.

Mrs. Richardson was elected president of the Atlanta Better Films committee in June, 1923 and re-elected in June, 1924.

She is a daughter of the late Captain and Mrs. J. L. Richmond, beloved pioneer citizens of Atlanta. Her mother was before her marriage, Miss Eugenia Sims, daughter of one of Georgia's most distinguished lawyers. She is a sister of Mrs. George Forrester and Mrs. W. C. Jarnagin, prominent and popular members of the social life of Atlanta. Mrs. Richardson is also a member of the D. A. R., through her ancester Captain John Dickinson, for whose wife, Sarah Dickinson, the chapter at Newnan is named, and through her descent from Captain William Richmond, a hero of the revolution. She is also quite prominent and deeply interested in religious work and is a member of St. Mark Methodist church, where she teaches a large class in the Sunday school.

Ninth District Convention Reelects Mrs. Yow President

The Ninth District Federated clubs met in Lawrenceville for the thirteenth annual convention as the guests of the three federated clubs, the Woman's club, Junior club and P.-T. A.

The president's conference was called to order at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, fifteen clubs being represented. In these reports given by club presidents it will be seen that the women have been very active in getting books and equipment for their schools and libraries. Club houses have been built and community houses furnished, juvenile courts established, junior clubs organized, prizes of various kinds offered by the club to departments doing the best work and many memorial trees planted.

The first session of the convention was called to order by Mrs. G. K. Bagwell, president of the woman's club of Lawrenceville. A pageant followed introducing the officers of the district, and the departments depicting the different phases of the work being done by the women. Mayor Sammons welcomed the visitors in behalf of the city of Lawrenceville, and Judge Hutchins extended greetings from the Kiwanians. Mrs. Bagwell then expressed her pleasure at having the convention be the delegates of the federated clubs. Mrs. Hubert Yow, the district president, responded to these words of welcome. She also gave her annual report at this time and outlined new fields of work for the club women. She introduced the speaker of the evening, Hon. Robert Troutman, executive committeeman of the State American Legion. Mr. Troutman spoke on the fundamental principles of our government.

After the evening session a brilliant reception was held in the school library for the delegates and visitors. This affair was sponsored by the Kiwanians.

The executive board met on the morning of the twenty-eight for a short session. The board recommended to the body that the Tallulah Falls work be placed under a chairman, separating it from the treasurer's regular work.

The morning session was given over to the reports of the officers and chairmen of the departments and divisions.

The first vice president reported three new clubs federated during the year: Junior club of Lawrenceville, Cedar Creek Community club and the Woman's club of Canton. Slogan for next year, "A federated club in every county in the district." Treasurer's report showed more than five thousand dollars handled by the clubs during the past year. The secretary stated that she had written some 250 letters in regard to club work.

American citizenship reported wonderful work done along all lines of its work, the division of civics being particularly active. Applied Education announced that the Woman's club of Commerce had again won the gavel and five dollar bill attached for the best work done in the whole department. Hoschton Woman's club received honorable mention. The department of legislation had worked for all bills as requested by the state and general federation. Public welfare reported much work done for the health of both grown people and the children and stressed the excellent results of the health-mobile.

The fine arts department for the first time had arranged for an exhibit of handiwork, which was shown in one of the school rooms. A committee of Mrs. Lamar Rucker, Mrs. Sanford and Mrs. Beecham were appointed to judge the entries. The Woman's Club of Lawrenceville was awarded the $5 offered by the president for the best collection. The Woman's club of Norcross was given second place. Mrs. Stark, chairman, reported telegram telling of the wonderful edition of The Hoschton News issued by the Woman's Club of Hoschton.

Mention is made of the beautiful choral music rendered by the choral club of Winder.

Mrs. Cliff Walker was introduced and the convention stood in recognition of the wife of Georgia's governor, other distinguished women introduced to the convention were Mrs. Brantley, president of the state federation; Mrs. Sanford, second vice president of the state; Mrs. Lena Felkner Lewis, president of the eighth district, and Mrs. Beecham.

At the close of the morning session a beautiful luncheon was served by the Junior club in the community house to some 125 guests.

At the afternoon session it was the convention's pleasure to hear a message from Mrs. Walker on the cooperation of the P.-T. A. and the women's clubs. This address was very interesting and instructive.

Mrs. Lamar Rucker spoke on the club institute to be held at the university the last of June. She outlined the courses and urged every woman to come who could.

Mrs. Brantley spoke for the Mercer institute, saying that its program would follow that of the general federation. Most clubs do not understand just what it is.

The credentials committee reported three district officers present, 14 clubs represented and 53 visitors.

The time and place committee reported invitations from Clayton and Jefferson. As the district was organized twelve years ago at Clayton the committee recommended that the invitation from the Woman's club at Clayton be accepted.

The nominating committee reported the following slate made and recommended that it be accepted: President, Mrs. Hubert Yow, of Martin; first vice president, Mrs. J. E. McElroy, of Norcross; second vice president, Mrs. G. K. Bagwell, of Lawrenceville; secretary, Miss Claire Anderson, of Commerce; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Turner, of Jefferson.

All the resolutions recommended by this resolution committee were accepted. Meeting closed with the circle of friendship and all singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

400 Women Attend Sixth District Convention Meet

The 14th annual convention of the Sixth District Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, which was held in the First Baptist church of Barnesville last Friday, proved to be one of the most interesting and helpful meetings. Clubs from almost every community in the district were represented, some of them having large representations present, there being registered nearly 400 delegates and visitors, making an audience which practically filled the main auditorium of the church.

Mrs. L. A. Collier, president of the Woman's club of Barnesville, called the convention to order, the audience singing "America, the Beautiful." Mrs. Collier made a beautiful talk in opening the convention. Rev. Arthur Jackson made the invocation.

Addresses of welcome were made by B. H. Hardy, of the Civitan club, and Mrs. J. M. Anderson, president of the Lamar federation, which were responded to by Mrs. White Jamerson, of Jackson.

Little Miss Virginia Brelsford captured the audience with her singing, responding with an encore.

Mrs. A. M. Lambdin, of Barnesville, in a talk presented Miss Lucile Akin, of Jenkinsburg, acting president. Miss Akin took the place of Mrs. R. C. Johnson, of Zebulon, who had to give up the work because of illness, and Miss Akin was highly commended and complimented by the exceptionally efficient and splendid work she has done. She explained how the gavel, made from the Toombs oak at Athens, came into her possession as the president of the district federation, because more new clubs had been organized in the sixth district than in any other district of the state. Miss Akin took charge of the program and kept the exercises going smoothly and rapidly, dispensing the business of the convention according to schedule.

Mrs. L. A. Ingram, of Fayetteville, presented the program for the day, which was unanimously adopted. Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, of McDonough, a former president, was presented, and made a forceful address, emphasizing the importance of organization, and making many suggestions for carrying on the work of the clubs.

Mrs. Bruce Carr Jones, of Macon, one of the outstanding club women of Georgia, past president of the State Parent-Teacher association, outlined the relationship that should exist between the different organizations.

Mrs. B. M. Boykin, of Atlanta, corresponding secretary of the state federation, was introduced, and made a talk, emphasizing the importance of women voting, and detailing the methods of making community improvements. Mrs. Boykin made a splendid impression on all who heard her talk.

Mrs. T. T. Stevens, of Atlanta, president of the Atlanta federation, brought an inspiring message regarding the Tallulah Falls school, which the state federation fosters, and she was followed by an equally impressive talk by Mrs. H. D. Russell, of Macon, in which she explained the establishment and advantages of the Mercer university.

Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, of Atlanta, former president of the state federation, briefly explained the Ella White Memorial, the purpose of which was to raise $25,000, an endowment from which to assist in financing the state federation.

Mrs. A. F. McGee, of Macon, presented to Miss Akin, for the district federation, a beautiful loving cup, donated by the firm of Reese & Armstrong, of Macon, to be awarded annually to the county in the district making the best record in educational work.

Mrs. L. C. Warren, of Griffin, secretary, spoke on citizenship, in which she dealt with the duty of women participating in the public affairs, including politics.

At the lunch hour Mrs. F. E. Land, of Macon, who took a leading part in the business of the convention, acted as toastmistress, and had many of the leading women present to respond with interesting talks on various topics of special interest to the women present.

At the noon hour luncheon was served in the Sunday school annex. This luncheon was prepared and served by the members of the Lamar county clubs, every community in the county joining in heartily with the Barnesville clubs, making it a lovely affair.

The afternoon session was equally as interesting as the morning session, during which many reports were given by the different officers and individual clubs, and the transaction of routine business. Among the musical features was a beautiful solo by Mrs. H. E. Armstrong, a musical number by Mrs. C. M. Dunn, Mrs. Perrin Collier and Miss Elizabeth Eley, and little Miss Virginia Brelsford was requested to sing again, which she did, much to the pleasure of the audience.

The resolutions committee reported in favor of having reports at the convention hereafter in the forenoon and the addresses in the afternoon, which was adopted. The resolutions committee also reported resolutions of thanks to the women of the Lamar County Federation for the splendid hospitality of the day, which was adopted by a rising vote.

The nominating committee recommended the election of Miss Lucile Akin, of Jenkinsburg, president; Mrs. L. C. Warren, of Griffin, vice president; Mrs. L. A. Collier, of Barnesville, secretary and treasurer, which report was unanimously adopted.

The invitation of the Henry County Federation to meet in McDonough next year was unanimously accepted, after which the convention adjourned.

Competitive Art Exhibit Given By Columbus Federated Clubs

BY JULIA COLLIER HARRIS.

An exhibition of paintings under the auspices of the City Federation of Columbus, which was called the "Naegele Competitive Exhibition," opened on May 22 at 4 o'clock with a private view, to which the heads of the civic organizations and the teaching bodies of Columbus were invited. The pictures and art objects were housed in the Muscogee club arcade, and the exhibition room was transformed by the committee on arrangements into an art gallery of real beauty and distinction.

The problem of bare walls, usually so unattractive as a background for pictures, in the present case was happily solved and the ordinary plaster surface was draped with hand-woven shawls of Persian, Indian, Chinese and French workmanship, loaned by members of the committee on arrangements. These shawls were fastened flat against the wall so as to give an unobtrusive effect of tapestry in shades or russet, claret, wood-color and warm gray, and against them the pictures are hung. No more beautiful background for paintings could be devised.

Three cases of rare and lovely art objects were placed at the far end of the hall, all of these loaned by Mr. Naegele and Columbus collectors. Mr. Naegele's collection represents years of selection and acquisition, and includes Tanagra pieces, Assyrian fragments, Egyptian scarabs, antique glasses, and silver coins and ornaments of great value.

In the other cabinets were beautiful pieces of Bohemian glass, fine cloissonne from China and Japan, brasses and bronzes from China and Russia, decorated boxes from Czecho-Slovakia, and figures of Royal Copenhagen from Denmark.

All these interesting accessories, beautiful in themselves, served to set off the charm of the paintings which cover both sides of the gallery. Fourteen of these were lent by New York galleries, most of them being the work of members of the national academy.

Seven Portraits.

In addition to the fourteen paintings to be voted on by all visitors were seven portraits by C. F. Naegele, likenesses of Isma Dooly, Gunby Jordon, the late Mrs. Jordan, the late Mrs. Walton, Theodore Foley, Judge Lumpkin and Tom Hudson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charlton Hudson.

It was especially appropriate that the portrait of Miss Dooly should be on display at the time, since for years she was active in prompting art interests in Atlanta and was one of the group of Atlantans to form an art association in this city more than 75 years ago, which association maintained an art school under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Osgood for several years and offered scholarships at this school to students.

During those years exhibitions of a nature similar to the one given in Columbus were sponsored by the Atlanta Art association, and through the columns of The Atlanta Constitution Miss Dooly constantly urged club women and general readers to support all sincere efforts toward the spread of art appreciation in the south.

At the opening view, after the invited guests were assembled, Mr. Naegele made a short talk on the ideals and purposes of the exhibit. He emphasized the fact that the exhibition was being given primarily for the benefit of the young people of Columbus, with the object of arousing in them a love for and understanding of fine arts. Naturally, he said, if the pupils in the schools are encouraged to think of the arts of painting and decoration as being indispensable to the progress of the community, when they grow up they will pass on this message of appreciation of the beautiful as a part of one's daily life to their own young people.

Mr. Naegele pointed out the educational value of the scheme of the present exhibition, its voting feature having the effect of stimulating the interest of the young visitors and of making them feel a personal interest in it. Another good feature of the plan, as outlined by Mr. Naegele, was the competition in all the grades for which prizes were offered for the best essay submitted on a chosen painting by each pupil visiting the exhibition.

The exhibition lasted two weeks, committees from the federated women's clubs acting as hostesses each day. Talks were made before the pupils of all the public schools, including the negro schools, explaining the plan of the exhibition, and inviting the children to call and vote, special days being set apart for groups of schools, and a whole day for the colored schools. An admittance fee of ten cents was charged.

Exhibition Well Attended.

The exhibition was well attended and all visitors, whether school children or adults, expressed their interest by voting on their favorite painting. The picture which won the largest ballot was "A March Day," by Merritt Post, and it is planned to purchase this painting as a nucleus for a collection.

To the following ladies of the committee on arrangements for the Federated clubs, as well as to Mr. Naegele, great praise is due for the success of the exhibition: Miss Edwina Wood, president of the City Federation; Mrs. W. W. Stewart, chairman of art of the City Federation; Mrs. T. C. Hudson, Mrs. Lloyd Bowers, Mrs. Harry Woodruff, Mrs. Mary Pou and Mrs. James Callaway.

The following artists were represented at the exhibition: Elizabeth Nourse, Bolton Jones, Charles Hawthorne, Merritt Post, Frank de Haven, H. F. Waltman, Guy Wiggins, F. J. Waugh, Chauncey Ryder, F. V. Du Mond, Irving Couse, Wm. Ritchel, E. Potthast, Robert Henri.

Crawford Woman's Club Holds Meeting.

The Crawford Woman's club held its regular June meeting at the club house. After the regular opening exercises the secretary's report was read and accepted and reports from all standing committees submitted. The treasurer's report was especially gratifying, one item showing the net proceeds from the Georgia Products day dinner to be $38.55.

The truly inspiring feature of the afternoon, however, came when the delegates to the eighth district meet at Livonia submitted their reports. Mrs. Blanchard spoke of the very cordial hospitality extended to them, also of the beautiful luncheon and reception by the chamber of commerce.

Mrs. Armistead reported the business part of the meeting and told how well Crawford stood in all reports and discussions and how proud all members should be of the prominence accorded the club. Mrs. Davis followed with a splendid tribute to our ex-president, Mrs. Armistead, and read the poem read by Mrs. Armistead at the district meet, which was really a report of the club's activities during the past year put into rhyme and which created such a favorable impression at Livonia.

Mrs. Davis also announced the good news that Crawford had won the gavel for the eighth district, an honor of which the club feels justly proud.

An original program under the direction of Mrs. Ed Coile was then carried out, the members responding in a way truly gratifying to the committee in charge. The program follows:

Response to roll call with an original limerick: original poem, "Contentment," Mrs. W. W. Armistead; original poem, "History of the Club," Mrs. L. L. Whitley; exhibition of an original painting, Mrs. H. T. O'Neal; current events of town, Mrs. Mell Blanchard; song, Mrs. Joe Hargrove; "Epitaph of a Club Woman," Mrs. Jake England.

All numbers were very interesting, some especially proving to be of real literary value, and needless to say were thoroughly enjoyed by all present. At the conclusion of the program the hostesses, Mrs. Mell Blanchard, Mrs. Ralph Bray and Mrs. Stephen Stokely, served a delicious salad course and the meeting adjourned.

Information Given Southern Girls.

Keen interest is being taken by Georgia club women in the work of the Southern Woman's Educational alliance, with headquarters in Richmond, Va., because of the recent establishment of a southeastern division with Mrs. Samuel Inman, former director of Georgia in the General Federation of Women's Clubs, as president of the Atlanta branch.

The purpose of the alliance is to serve as a bridge between the southern girl and the right opportunity, as a central source of educational and vocational guidance for women and girls, and as a clearing house of educational opportunities for them. A study of vocations is being conducted by Miss Anne Stephens, of the Atlanta Opportunity school, and will extend through the summer months. Information is being gathered by the executives of the division on student aids.

More specific information regarding the service being rendered may be obtained free of charge by writing the southeastern division office, addressing the inquiry to the Southern Woman's Educational alliance, Tuft building, 249 Ivy street, Atlanta, Ga.

Fourth District Holds Convention.

The convention of the fourth district Federation of Women's Clubs was recently most royally entertained by the Community club, of Bowdon, Ga. During the afternoon of Tuesday the Community club kept open house to the large number of guests that represented the various clubs of the district. A buffet supper was served from 7 to 8 o'clock at the beautiful new club house of which the Community club is justly proud.

The first session of the convention was called to order at 8 p. m. Tuesday with Mrs. Rhodes Browne, district president, and Mrs. Henry Bird, hostess president, in charge. Addresses of cordial welcome were made by Mayor W. A. Stephenson and several other citizens representing the various organizations of the little city. Mrs. Rhodes Browne, of Columbus, delivered a bright, sparkling response to these welcomes.

After a most interesting program Mayor and Mrs. W. A. Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Bird entertained the convention at a beautiful reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson.

The Wednesday morning session was filled with talks and reports of great interest to the convention.

On the program appeared Mrs. J. K. Ottley, Mrs. Rhodes Browne, Mrs. A. M. Hill, Mrs. J. T. Roberts, Dr. G. W. Camp, V. D. Whatley and others. A feature that was most especially enjoyable to the convention was special music by members of the Georgia Glee club.

At noon the visitors and the hostess club were guests of the Bowdon State Normal and Industrial college at a most beautiful luncheon, which was prepared and served by the home economics department of that institution.

During the afternoon session an instructive address was delivered by Dr. C. E. Waller, of the state board of health. The symposium on "What I Like Best in Our Federation" was most interesting.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, Mrs. H. M. Bird, Bowdon, Ga.; first vice president, Mrs. John Wilkinson, Hogansville, Ga.; second vice president, Miss Dora Freeman, Greenville, Ga.; secretary, Mrs. Arch Avery, West Point, Ga.; treasurer, Mrs. N. V. Boddie, Chipley, Ga.

An invitation from Columbus to hold the next convention in that city was accepted. One of the most delightful features of the convention was the farewell party at which Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Brooks entertained the guests as they were leaving for their respective homes.

The cordial hospitality of the residents of Bowdon will linger in the hearts of those who were visitors in this little city during the convention of 1924.

Clarke University Asks for Books.

Mrs. Archibald P. Brantley, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, calls the attention of Georgia club women to a request from the inter-racial committee of Georgia to aid Clarke university for negroes in their undertaking to obtain a library of 10,000 volumes, for the purpose of placing Clarke university in the class of A-1 negro colleges. Club women sending books to Clarke university may report them under the heading of books sent to schools of state.

Georgia clubs have set as their goal the addition in 1924 of 50,000 books to school libraries. These books may be sent direct to Clarke university, Atlanta, and the president of the university will include them in his report. Harper's, Century and Geographical magazines will be gladly received.

Atlanta D. A. R. Observes 'Flag Day' And 'Magna Charta'

Flag day, June 14, was celebrated by Atlanta chapter, D. A. R., with interesting and appropriate exercises. The regent, Mrs. Bun Wylie, presided, and the program opened with the singing of "America the Beautiful." Miss Margarite Hodnett, bearing the D. A. R. colors and Miss Dorothy Barnes the U. S. flag, presented them to the regent. As they held the flags the audience stood and gave the salute followed by the American creed.

Mrs. Wylie presented to the Atlanta chapter in a graceful speech a handsome silk flag of D. A. R. colors, blue and white, the center white stripe bearing the insignia in blue. The resolution was unanimously passed at Continental congress in April, that each chapter have its D. A. R. colors.

Mrs. Wren McGuin recited "Your Flag and My Flag."

Stirring Address.

Colonel William R. Dashiell, of the U. S. army, Fort McPherson, delivered a magnificent address on "Our Flag."

Mrs. Benjamin Parker sang "A Birthday," by Huntington Woodman, and an Irish folk song, "My Love and Arbutus," with Miss Helen Schaid accompanist.

General David L. Shanks brought a stirring and patriotic address on "Preparedness."

Mrs. Charles F. Rice, state chairman of Magna Charta day, read an instructive paper on "Magna Charta," this being celebrated in conjunction with Flag day.

Bori and Kreisler Featured in Victor Records This Week

Whoever has heard Lucrezia Bori in such parts will appreciate her being chosen to record the particular numbers she sings this week for Victor records. "Adieu notre petite table" (Farewell, Our Little Table) is the wistful lament of Manon at parting with the things she has shared with her lover. The song of the priestess Lakme, intuitively aware of the presence of her unseen lover, occupies the other side of this charming record—"Pourquoi dans les grands bois" (Why Do I Thus Love to Stray).

Fritz Kreisler plays "Minuet" by Haydn. With it is paired an "Old French Gavotte."

Two cheerful records by two cheerful singers in duet this week are "Song Birds in Georgia" and "Whistling the Blues Away" by Wendell Hall and Carson Robinson.

Royal Dadmun has a robust voice, and the subjects of his two records this week are "The Clang of the Forge" and "Gypsy John."

This is the first opportunity to hear four dances on a single record by the Whitemans. It is a big twelve-inch record with two fox-trots on each side. There's a little pause between the two dances on a side—just enough for the applause! They are "Where Is That Old Girl of Mine?" "Driftwood," "Mandalay" and Step, Henrietta."

June languor craves the waltz, and so Max Dolin's orchestra obligingly puts down two of the most romantic of Mexican influence, "Cielito Lindo" (Beautiful Sky) and "La Golondrina" (The Swallow) are really lovely.

Back with a bang to the fox trot the Bensons and the International Novelty Orchestra bring one. The Chicago organization plays "You Left Me Out in the Rain" and in rebuttal the Internationals record "Don't Blame It All on Me."

AHAVATH ACHIM CLASS TO HEAR HERMAN EFFEL

Herman Effel, noted Russian violinist who won recognition in many European capitals for his interpretation of Russian folklore, will appear in Atlanta for the first time at the closing exercises of the Ahavath Achim Bible class tonight at 8 o'clock. He will be accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Fannie Seigel-Goldstein.

Hebrew selections for the occasion will be contributed by the newly-organized music club of the Ahavath Achim synagogue. Other piano, violin, vocal and Bible recitations will also be rendered at that time.

Prize awards for attendance and scholarship will be presented Sunday night by I. J. Paradise, chairman of the advisory council for the Bible class. The public is invited

'The Torch Bearers' To Be Guild Offering Tuesday-Wednesday

Mrs. John Colquitt Meacham, as she will appear in the play, "The Torch Bearers," which the Theater Guild of Atlanta will present Tuesday and Wednesday, June 17 and 18, at the Atlanta Woman's club auditorium-theater for the benefit of the four junior high schools. Mrs. Meacham's interpretation of a dainty old lady, eternally young, is one of the most delightful characterizations in the production.

Everything is in readiness for the finished presentation of the play, "The Torch Bearers," the dramatic comedy offering of the Theater Guild of Atlanta, which Atlantans will be given the opportunity to enjoy Tuesday and Wednesday of the present week in the theater of the Atlanta Woman's club. The Theater Guild has never presented so pleasing a production, and no detail of expense or effort has been spared to make "The Torch Bearers" a delightful play for old and young to see.

The four junior high schools will benefit by the production, and the presidents of parent-teacher associations of these schools, Mrs. Clarence L. Williamson, Mrs. Birdie B. Moore, Mrs. J. E. Boardman and Mrs. William A. Bass, stress the importance of every P.-T. A. member in the city cooperating in this first mutual undertaking of the four schools.

Mrs. John Gelzer, Jr., charming and talented Atlanta young matron, has been added to the cast of the production. Mrs. Gelzer has done distinctive work in a number of productions. She assumes the role of a widow whose husband dropped dead after hearing she was to take a leading part in a play.

Miss Harriet Noyes, the ingenue in the cast, is given an opportunity to wear stunning gowns and wraps, which she will do in the forthcoming production. Mrs. Earl Sherwood Jackson, the director, who is also cast for a prominent role, has a delightful part as the silly, charming, irresponsible Mrs. Paula Ritter.

A sewing basket which Mrs. Jackson will use in the play is one of the many gorgeous stage properties. It was designed by Miss Janie Hood and is an elaborate affair in pastel shades—green, yellow, blue, lavender and rose silk.

Dahl will furnish many of the magnificent flowers used in the last act of the play. Some of the large pieces will also be designed by Mrs. Emma Dolvin. M. Rich will supply many of the stage furnishings.

Mrs. Katherine Hillyer Connerat is the society woman in the production frequently referred to as a "leading spirit," and this particular description so flatters her that she overlooks no opportunity to justify it. Her characterization also calls for elaborate gowns.

Others playing interesting parts are Mrs. John Colquitt Meacham, J. O. Wood, Miss Anne Hubbard, Channing Cope, Fred Stewart, Jr., Bryan Collier, Henry McLemore.

Tickets for the production will continue on sale at Cable Piano company until the evening of the performance. There will be a matinee Wednesday. Seats downstairs are $1, while balcony seats may be obtained for 50 cents. Miss Isabelle Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. John Litel, Miss Gladys Hurlbut and Wilfred Litel will be guests at the matinee.

GUILT

BY HENRY JAMES FORMAN

"It's all right," said the doctor quietly. "You are awake now."

"It's I, Larry Summers," Larry broke in explosively.

"Larry!" murmured Bradbury dazedly. "What's happened?" He looked from one to the other.

Then they noted a remarkable thing.

No trace of the angry, pinched, almost shriveled expression of the features remained.

Lowell Bradbury, though pale, looked as he had normally looked of late.

"Ah, the experiment, Larry," he cried with sudden eagerness. "Has it worked?"

"You ought to know," answered Larry. "Don't you know?"

"The pads of paper," he cried. "I put pads all over the house. It should be written there—all that I know or knew! I willed myself to go through all of that night of Van's murder, and to make a record of it. Get the pads!"

Suddenly he beheld the incased dagger in Larry's hand.

"What," he asked bankly, "is this thing doing here?"

Larry looked at him in amazement.

All were suddenly startled by a knock at the door.

"I'll see who it is," Larry started forward. The tension of the moment urged him to any action. His nerves were like taut springs.

The person at the door was Virginia.

"Miss Oliver," he gasped. "You!"

"I could not wait any longer," Virginia murmured tearfully. "I was sick with anxiety. Oh, tell me, Mr. Summers, has anything happened?"

"Happened? Yes," he stammered in perplexed bewilderment. He was blocking her way in indecision. Then abruptly his expression changed.

"Come in, Miss Oliver," he said, "you ought to be here. Yes, I guess it's the only way," and he stood aside for her to enter.

"Doctor, this young lady is Miss Oliver, Mr. Bradbury's fiancee," Larry explained.

"Ah!" sighed the doctor gently, as though to say, "This is tragic." But he was a man accustomed to tragedy in life.

"Sit down, Virginia," Bradbury put in, drawing her gently toward a chair by his desk. Virginia unresistingly sank into it.

"Ah, here is one of the pads," he remarked, observing a square block of paper. The doctor hurried over and picked it up.

"That is blank," he said.

"Well, they're all over the house. Try Van's room and mine, Larry."

Larry eagerly complied. He returned in a moment with two additional pads, holding them out.

"This one," he said, "was in Van's room, and it's blank; the other was in your room, Lowell, and that contains some writing."

"Read it, Larry," Bradbury quietly urged.

Larry held the paper under the shade of the lamp and scanned it silently as the other waited.

"By heavens!" he exclaimed and turned white. "Lowell, do you know what is written here?" he demanded harshly.

"No," answered Bradbury huskily. "What is it, Larry? Read it!"

"It—oh, I can't!" cried Larry, the cold perspiration beading his forehead. "I can't. You read it, doctor."

The doctor, who had been studying Bradbury closely, smiled faintly.

"Very well, I'll read it," and he took the paper from Larry and began reading the script:

"Van Greenfield is all those things that as a boy I had hoped to be. He is kind, gentle-hearted, generous, altruistic. For years my poor father, a saintly man, had held up those ideals of his before me. He dinned them into my ears until I was sick of them.

"Something perverse in me started me in exactly the opposite direction. I am cold and self-centered, and I care nothing about the feelings or sufferings of others. Their troubles are their own lookout.

"I have been successful, yet my success is bitter in my mouth. I cling to Van, because he embodies all the ideals hammered into my brain in my youth. I cannot part from Van because he is my other self, the self I should have been but am not; yet I envy him with an envy that is growing into hatred. He is a constant and living reproach to me. He overhangs my life like a shadow. He dwarfs and shrivels the soul within me. I shall never be rid of him, never marry Virginia, never leave him, until I kill him and wipe out the living blot upon my life. I am going to kill Van."

"Oh!" Virginia, who sat with bowed head, gave a terrified gasp, and covering her face with her hands, began to sob convulsively.

"No!" Bradbury cried with the supplicating tone of one who had felt the fiery iron, and feared any further branding.

"I could not have done it! Someone else must have done it. Look in Van's room—there may be something."

Larry shook his head. He could not speak.

"We saw what happened there," put in the doctor quietly.

"What was it?" gasped Bradbury, a deathly pallor spreading over his face.

"There," said the doctor, "we saw a repressed man whose instincts, the savage instincts that slumber in all of us, break through the wall of a too severe repression, and lead him to commit an act in his subconscious state that he could not have committed consciously."

"You mean—me?" gasped Bradbury.

"Yes," the doctor nodded, "we saw you plunge the dagger into the bedding—into the body, that is, of your friend and imaginary enemy."

Virginia, overcome by her emotion, uttered a low moan.

The doctor looked at her. He mentioned to Larry to lead her to the sofa, and merely said, "A little water," Bradbury, standing by, looked on, almost heedless of these movements.

"I'll pay," he said in slow, solemn tones. "If I am guilty I must bear the punishment. I swore I would discover Van's murderer, and if mine is the guilty hand then I must receive my just deserts.

"Larry!" he cried out in a terrible voice, "I must stand trial for the murder of Van Greenfield!"

"Oh, no!" Virginia cried, "you could not, Mr. Summers! That in itself would be a crime!"

Larry glanced miserably searchingly at Doctor Xavier.

"You could no more try him for this," announced the doctor in clear, deliberate tones, "than you could a two-year-old baby who had unwittingly let fall a knife into its mother's breast.

"Science," he went on, "by means of psychology, or psychoanalysis, or what you will, is daily discovering more and more of man's dual nature. Science now knows that to repress your emotions, your compulsive thoughts, your instinctive feelings, may lead to disease, or crime, as it has done in this case."

"But, what are you to do?" demanded Larry almost angrily. "If you think you want to get rid of a man, must you just go ahead and kill him rather than repress your thoughts?"

"No," answered the doctor firmly. "If such thoughts come to you, however wicked and criminal, don't press them back into the secret depths of your subconscious self, where all our bestial and savage ancestry lies lurking. That is the way to make them break out, often with the most tragic results. Don't say to yourself as Mr. Bradbury probably said, 'I am too good for such thoughts,' and then thrust them aside, and bury them in the vast swamp of your subconscious self, where everything abides, where nothing is forgotten. Rather you must bring them out into the light of day, examine them, face them and say, 'You may run your course among my thoughts, but you shall never enter into my actions.'

"By recognizing evil thoughts and fighting them in the open, you banish them, make them drain off, and so clean your soul of them. That is the great merit of the confessional in certain creeds and religions, if that confession be sincere. That accounts for the rise of the psychoanalytic doctor of today."

"Larry," said Bradbury, "in spite of what the doctor says, Van's death must be avenged. I have sworn that it must, and I would have left no stone unturned to bring the one responsible for it to justice. I am the one. Heaven knows how it came about; but I insist on standing trial." Bradbury's voice broke, and he began to cry bitterly.

"After what the doctor has just told us?" asked Larry. "Turn a case like that over to a jury of twelve grocers? It would be murder!"

"It would, Summers," assented the doctor. "But I understand this man's desire for expiation. That is natural. He wishes to cleanse the dark and stagnant places of his soul, and he thinks his own death will do it."

"If you want to atone," cried Virginia warmly, going towards Bradbury with outstretched hands, "why don't you do something fine and big? Why don't you take up Van Greenfield's work, for instance?"

"That is wisdom," put in the doctor. "There is your path of atonement, and your life will be a thousand times better than death. Change your life, put aside your work, and take up the dead man's labors for good."

"My life!" repeated Bradbury bitterly. "Of what use is my life to me?"

"But it will be of use to others!" broke in Virginia.

"What will life be to me now without the woman I love?" he went on as though he had not heard her. "What decent woman would want to share such a life as mine, with such a stain?"

"I'll share your life, if you still want me," Virginia spoke up bravely. "In my heart I know that the real you is innocent. In time you will feel it yourself."

"When the dark places are made light and clean," murmured the doctor.

"Thank heaven, there are such women," said Larry fervently wringing Virginia's hand.

"Virginia!" brokenly murmured Bradbury, clasping her in his arms, "would you consent to share such a life as mine? You love me enough for that?"

"I love you enough to want to help you make your life as beautiful as you dreamed it in your youth, with all those fine ideals that your heart craved."

The doctor and Summers turned away.

"Ah, Virginia," Bradbury murmured, "I need you—Lord knows how much I need you!"

And the eyes of both were wet with tears.

Serving Five States

Five great commonwealths — Texas, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee, form the "empire" served by The Haverty Stores. From the "Palmetto" to the "Lone Star," swings the pendulum of this business, which had its beginning in a little store 25x50 on East Hunter Street in Atlanta. From a provincial to a national institution in a span of thirty-five years is, in brief, the history of The Haverty Stores.

From the start this business has been conducted on the installment or partial payment plan. In those days "credit" stores bore a generally unsavory reputation, but that was not the fault of the system itself, but of the men who conducted it. Any business can be made good or bad, according to the personnel of direction. We decided that a fine, clean, going business could be built up on this basis, and the present huge Haverty organization is a testimonial to that decision and belief.

We have excluded from our stocks all inferior merchandise; we have held strictly to principles which now are well known to the public, and which are never changed without printed notice; we have adhered to the plain, unvarnished truth in the telling of our business story, either by word of mouth or by the printed word. And 100,000 homes furnished by The Haverty Stores is evidence of the people's confidence in our ability to serve them as they expect to be served.

We had no models to pattern from; no one to tell us what to do or how to do it, except the inspiration to conduct a furniture business that would develop itself by its cleanness, its fairness and its ability to give fair value, dollar for dollar.

After a varied career in the commercial world, extending over a period of years, seventeen stores had become a part of what was known as the Rhodes-Haverty organization. In 1908 this partnership was dissolved, the present owners of the Haverty Stores taking nine and the other partner eight.

From Atlanta our operations were extended to Savannah. From Savannah to Charleston, S. C., and in consecutive order the following cities: Columbia, S. C.; Birmingham, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn.; Dallas and Houston, Texas. Today The Haverty Stores serve in these cities alone a population exceeding a million and a quarter people, to say nothing of the scores of other smaller cities and towns adjacent to these stores.

Miss Fort Weds Mr. Lummus At First Baptist Church

A marriage uniting two prominent southern families and characterized by exceptional brilliance was that of Miss Martha Low Fort, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Fort, and John Newton Lummus, Jr., which was solemnized Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock at the First Baptist church on Peachtree street. Dr. Charles W. Daniel, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large and fashionable assemblage of relatives and friends.

The church was elaborately decorated in palms and Easter lilies, clusters of the stately flowers, tied with white satin ribbons, marking the pews for the reception guests, and preceding the ceremony a musical program was rendered by Joseph Ragan, the numbers including favorite selections of the bride. Handsome palms formed the background of the altar, which was elaborately decorated with flowers. Pink gladioli in pedestal vases alternated with Easter lilies, and three eleven-branched candelabra held white lighted tapers.

Bridal Party.

The group of charming bridesmaids included Miss Martha Bell, Miss Margaret Middleton, Miss Mary Shedden, Miss Margaret Morgan, Miss Winnie Belle Davis and Miss Effie Daniel. They wore exquisite gowns of flesh colored chiffon veiling rose chiffon, and at the top of the deep hem of the full skirt a finish was given by a row of pink ostrich, this same trimming appearing on the long waist. They carried cascade bouquets of pastel-shaded flowers, including sweet peas, snapdragons, roses and delphinium.

Miss Mary Jean Stephenson, of Knoxville, Tenn., was maid of honor, and her gown was of orchid chiffon, a replica of the bridesmaids', and she carried a cascade bouquet of Dresden shaded flowers.

Little Miss Lucy Statham, daughter of Mrs. G. B. Statham, was flower girl, and her costume was of pink chiffon, trimmed with narrow pink ribbons and she carried a French basket filled with pink rosebuds.

The groomsmen were Horace Young and Herbert Payne, both of Miami, Fla.; Lynn Fort, Jr., brother of the bride; Frank Harrold, Shelley Davis and John Stewart. John S. Burgess, Frank Hooper, Sr., Dr. A. G. Fort and Stewart Colley, of Grantville, Ga., acted as ushers.

Beautiful Bride.

The beautiful bride was given in marriage by her father, Lynn Fort, with whom she entered the church, and they were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, W. T. Cox, of Miami, Fla. She was radiantly lovely in her gown of white chiffon veiling gleaming white satin, with trimmings of Chantilly lace, and exquisite pearl embroidery ornamenting the skirt and bodice. The panels at the side of the skirt were appliqued in petals of satin, and pearl embroidery finished the round neck and sleeveless armholes. The chiffon court train was appliqued in satin petals and bordered in satin, while a coro- of orange blossoms held the misty tulle veil to her soft brown hair. She carried a bouquet of orchids, swansonia, and valley lilies.

Mrs. Lynn Fort, mother of the bride, wore a handsome gown of black net, combined with Chantilly lace veiling coral satin, and her corsage bouquet was of pink roses.

Mrs. John Newton Lummus, Sr., of Miami, the groom's mother, was gowned in a Parisian model of black crepe, richly embroidered in steel beads, and her flowers were pink roses.

The bride's gifts to her attendants were silver perfume bottles, while the groom presented gold pencils to the groomsmen.

Informal Reception.

An informal reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fort, on Piedmont avenue, the guests including the members of the bridal party, out-of-town guests, and a small gathering of friends.

Palms, ferns, and cut flowers decorated the reception apartments. Pink roses, gladioli, and sweet peas filling silver and crystal vases ornamented the mantels in the living room, library and hall. An orchestra played a musical program. In the dining room the bride's table was covered with a Venetian lace cloth, and a three-tiered bride's cake, topped with a miniature bride, and embossed in pink roses and lilies of the valley, graced the center of the table. Silver candlesticks, holding pink candles, alternated with silver compotes, holding bonbons.

Punch was served from a bowl embedded in pink roses and smilax. Misses Pearl Fort and Arabelle Dudley presided, and the bride's register was kept by Miss Florence Boykin.

The bride's traveling gown was a three-piece suit of green charmeuse, embroidered in chenille and combined with georgette crepe. Her hat was an imported model in green straw.

Woman's Club of Decatur to Have Art Department

Plans for the art department of the Decatur Woman's club include a loan exhibition of works of art owned in Decatur, a series of popular lectures and possibly classes in the technique of some of the arts and crafts, according to Mrs. Joseph B. Hosmer, chairman of the department.

Many excellent examples of the work of American painters are owned in Decatur, as well as some good sculpture and other contemporary art. It is probable that some local artists will also be invited to show their work. "The important thing about such an exhibition is that it enables the community to take stock of the beauty that it already possesses," says Mrs. Hosmer.

"Rightly used art, whether in the form of paintings, sculpture or decorative abjects, enriches the home life of the community. The exhibtion and lectures which we plan will bring together the best things which we already have with sound ideas of their effective use. Beauty of itself is the most effective force for good citizenship."

The Decatur Woman's club feels very fortunate in securing Mrs. Hosmer for this important chairmanship, says Mrs. Frank Pond, president of the club. "She is an artist of national reputation who has devoted years to research in the application of the principles of design and color harmony to homelife.

"Mrs. Hosmer, while head of the art department at Stephens college, made a close survey of hundreds of typical homes to determine just what problems actually confronted the women of America in which could best be met by art methods. This survey touched not only such things as house furnishing and decorations, but their psychological and civic effects as well."

The series of lectures planned will include discussions, not only of the history and purposes of art, but as well its specific application to costume, furniture, decoration and other home and civic problems.

"What else can you expect when you invite trouble?"
There's a harmony of feeling among master Cleaners and Dyers to such an extent that when one meets any problem his visit to a fellow-member's plant is welcomed.
The other day, one master cleaner came to us on a difficult piece of dyeing and, in taking him through our plant, he noticed the large number of jobs which were going to cost us real money to handle—jobs that would be a real loss instead of a profit.
"What else can you expect," he said. "You advertise about all the difficult jobs you put through and pose as supermen. Naturally, you're going to get the 'tough job.'"
Far from complaining, we will still invite difficult jobs.

Miss Gladys Chandler Weds Mr. Park In Rockmart, Ga.

Sincere and cordial interest centers in the marriage of Miss Gladys Anne Chandler and Mitchell R. Park, which was solemnized at the country home of the bride's parents on Friday evening, June 6.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. B. Frank Pim, pastor of the Rockmart Methodist church, in the presence of a group of close friends and relatives. The ring ceremony, which always adds interest and impressiveness, was used.

The home was decorated with a profusion of roses and lilies, a color motif of pink and white being carried out in every appointment. Burning white and pink tapers, at intervals among the greenery, cast a brilliant glow over the bridal party.

The bride and groom entered together. Her gown of white canton crepe was fashioned in artistic, graceful lines. Yellow velvet ribbon and silk lace were used as the trimmings, these dainty accessories adding charm to the costume. Her hat to match was of yellow Georgette. She carried a bouquet of yellow and white roses.

An informal reception followed the ceremony. Mrs. Chandler and Miss Ruby Chandler were assisted in entertaining by a number of the bride's girl friends. The color scheme of pink and white was carried out in the refreshments, consisting of brick cream and angel food cake.

A lovely bit of sentiment about the wedding was in the plans; invitations had been issued by the Misses Chandler for "a party," to be given on that evening, and after the arrival of the guests, who were unaware of the secret, the Rev. Mr. Pim "appeared on the scene," and the beautiful marriage service began.

Mrs. Park is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Chandler, and is a very popular and attractive young woman. She attended Bessie Tift College at Forsyth, Ga., and belongs to the Kappa Delta sorority. Her family connections are prominent, her mother was a Miss Nettles, a member of one of northwest Georgia's pioneer and highly esteemed families.

Mr. Park is a member of one of Alabama's most representative families, and since coming here from Birmingham, where he formerly resided, has made a wide circle of friends. He holds a very responsible position with the Georgia Stone and Cement Co. He is prominent in business, society and church circles, being president of the Bartow, Floyd and Polk counties' Epworth League union.

Mr. and Mrs. Park left for a brief wedding trip, after which they will be at home at the Commercial hotel, Rockmart, Ga. The bride's going away gown was a lovely brown crepe, with which she wore a handsome blue charmeen coat and hat to match.

Quite a number of parties have been given in honor of Mrs. Park, during the past week.

Old Midway Church

BY MRS. T. G. STACY.

On the Dixie highway, going north from Brunswick to Savannah, one passes through the lower part of the county of Liberty. This road leads over causeways and bridges, under moss-laden trees, and then suddenly in making a curve the eye is confronted with a vision, many hundred yards ahead, of a beautiful, lofty-spired white church—which is the renowned Midway church. The road leads on between the building and the brick-walled cemetery, but if one cares to visit them it can be done by hunting up the caretaker who keeps the keys.

On the outer wall of the church is a bronze tablet, placed by the Brunswick chapter, D. A. R., and descendants of this colony, giving in a few lines the name of the church and some outstanding record of its people.

However, the character of any people generally has its foundation in the thoughts and actions of centuries of ancestors, so let us look back a little and see where the strength (mental and spiritual) of this revolutionary stronghold came from.

A company of Puritans met at Plymouth, England, on March 30, 1630, and after "a day of prayer and fasting and a sermon," accompanied by their two ministers, set sail in their own chartered vessel, the Mary and John, reaching the harbor of Nantucket May 30, 1630.

They settled a place in Massachusetts, which they named Dorchester, in honor of the old home so many of them left in England. After five years, becoming dissatisfied, many removed to Dorchester, Conn. Here they remained for sixty years, when some pushed on to find new fields. Always the departure was preceded by prayers and religious services. They reached Dorchester, S. C., December 20, 1695. For reasons too lengthy to tell in this article most of them later came farther south and settled in Dorchester, St. John's parish, Georgia.

Church Established.

Dr. Stacy's history says that "on Monday ye 15th of June, 1752, five of the said society set off for Medway . . . and got a grant of 22,400 acres of land to be reserved for us eighteen months." Later, others got a grant of 9,550 acres more of land. "They were known simply as settlers on the Medway and Newport rivers, and their house of worship as the Meeting House." In speaking of the name Midway (as it is now called), Dr. Stacy further says that "My own opinion is that the district or neighborhood was named Medway after the river of that name in England, and which soon degenerated into the more common and familiar name of Midway."

In 1754 the colonists erected a log house for religious worship. The church was of the Congregational or Independent form.

They soon held a meeting for the purpose of forming a covenant and also looking towards building a more convenient house of worship, which was built in 1756, the land being deeded by John Stevens and wife, and the contract for sawing the lumber (by hand) to James Maxwell.

The salary of the minister was raised by renting the pews and it was the custom, on the day of renting, for each member to give his note for that amount.

Special rules were adopted covering rights to vote, privileges, choice of seats, etc., and a "Book of Rights" kept of all amounts paid in.

This building was burned by the British under Colonel Prevost in 1778.

With all of her sons, who were able to bear arms, serving in the Revolutionary war, the church burned, the farms destroyed, their pastor, Rev. Allen, imprisoned, and in trying to escape was drowned, the community was almost broken up for a long time; but we find this sturdy, unconquerable people returning in 1782, and in 1792 they rebuilt the present church on the same spot as that burned.

The building is made of heart wood, still tough and good, painted white inside and out. The pews have the old-fashioned swinging doors, and the high pulpit has steps leading up on either side. The old melodeon has been converted into a handsome table which occupies a place in front of the pulpit.

The gallery runs around the three sides, amphitheater style, and was used in the olden times by the slaves. A little later these slaves had also a regular minister, a white man (the beloved C. C. Jones), who gave up a high position to become "an apostle to the colored people," preparing for them a catechism which was generally used in the south. This instruction had to be oral, as the school "established at Sunbury in 1816 to teach the negroes to read had to be discontinued, it being contrary to the laws of the state." After the Civil war the spiritual care of these negroes was still carried on by Rev. J. T. Waite under the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Audley King, of Colonel's Island, said that the people of Liberty would never know the debt they owed to this good man for his teaching and influence among the ex-slaves, for, said he, in all these years of mob riot and lynching, there has not been any in Liberty, and that, too, in a county where the negroes are in a majority.

Has Splendid Record.

This church is considered the oldest wooden church in Georgia, perhaps in the south.

It is wonderful not only in the durability of its building, but more so in the lasting influence of her sons and daughters. As the radio broadcasts the voice, which goes on and on, encircling the globe as far as the wave lengths go, so has the mighty influence for good gone over and around the world, even unto the heathen countries of China, Japan, Korea and Burma of the Orient, where nine of her missionaries labored.

This church has given to her country 86 ministers of the gospel (51 Presbyterians, 19 Baptists, 13 Methodists and three Episcopalians). Can any other church in all Georgia equal that, and in the space of a little over a century?

In the center of this beautiful and sacred cemetery is the $10,000 monument erected by the U. S. government to the memory of two Revolutionary generals, Screven and Stewart. The latter is the great grandfather of ex-President Roosevelt.

On the left is a small monument of the great philanthropist, John Lambert, who died December, 1786. His will reads in part: "I bequeath to the church and society * * * one silver tankard and two communion cups." The yearly income of his estate was for charitable, religious, and educational work, "or wherever any pious and good purpose may be answered in the church of Midway." Although this fund has been much reduced in the 138 years, this community is still being benefited by it.

In 1865 the cemtery was used as a slaughter pen and the church as a slaughter house by Sherman's army.

Fortunately the church was spared, but the homes were all burned, and the plantations wrecked. The people scattered, many remaining in their summer residences in the villages of Walthourville, Flemington, and Dorchester.

Smaller churches were built in each of the villages, and the doors of the old church were shut, and the records closed, except that annually the descendants and friends meet on April 26 and gave memorial services in the old church, bringing a basket dinner and enjoying the reunion of relatives and friends.

Mother Goose Inn Is Ideal Place For Little Children

No longer need Atlanta's children be cooped up in the hot city during the trying summer months, or risk their lives by dodging automobiles on its busy streets, or bemoan the fact that their parents may not be rich enough to send them on long vacations "away out into the country," for be it known that "Mother Goose" (the real, sure enough, live Mother Goose), fabled in song and story and known the world over as the children's best friend, has bought a home and established herself right here in Georgia, and, better still, only a very short distance out from Atlanta. Living with her are "Tom, Tom, the piper's son," who stole the famous Georgia razorback; the contrary "Mistress Mary," who reversed the order of nature by causing her wonderful garden to sparkle with "cockle shells and silver bells, and pretty maids all in a row," instead of the ordinary flowers and common garden truck which seem to be about all that the rest of us know how to raise; "Jack Spratt," the lean and skinny gawk, who cannot bear the sight of a piece of fat meat, and his equally famous spouse, who thrives so successfully on the fat that Jack throws into the discard; "little Miss Muffett," who, while still as fond as ever for her famous "curds and whey," has a much fonder liking for delicious Georgia buttermilk, and all the other famous characters whom Mother Goose taught us to love during the days of our youth.

On Candler Road.

"Mother Goose" boards them all at the Mother Goose Inn, on Candler road, three miles north of Buckhead, where they live with the fairies and gobolinks, the "black cat," the owls and witches, the loving fairy godmother and many another famous Mother Goose characters. If, as a child, you traveled with "Alice in Woodland" and enjoyed her experiences "through the mind's eye," your own children can now do even better, for they can go direct to the real home of all the interesting Mother Goose characters who held you in such rapt attention and whiled away so many delightful entrancing hours when you yourself were a mere slip of a boy or girl. There they may eat their meals in the "bird room," surrounded by parrots, bluejays, bobolinks, wrens and humming birds, and many another rare and beautiful bird, the little tots at tiny tables, and the larger ones like sure enough, real "grown-ups," and they may study the animals in the "zoo," for, oh, yes, the lions, and tigers, and elephants, and even the great big giraffe that seems to be all legs and neck, make the Mother Goose Inn their regular stopping place also, and then they may talk to the fairies and gobolinks and, best of all, enjoy the real loving championship of the other happy youngsters who board at Mother Goose's home and make life merry from early morning until "the wee sma' hours" cause heavy eyelids and drowsy bodies to seek health-giving slumber in the snug and "comfy" beds that carry them away to the still more interesting realms of Mother Goose's dreamland.

Spacious Grounds.

The Mother Goose Inn is a private home, with spacious grounds, where only normal, healthy children are taken to board. They may board with "Mother Goose" for a day, or a week, or a month, or a year—any length of time, in fact, so long as they remain children, whenever the family circumstances or business exigencies of the parents make it necessary or advisable for them to make some temporary provision for the accommodation and care of their children away from the home roof.

An excellent private school is maintained on the premises, and here the youngsters may pursue their studies under the tuition of a capable tutor during the regular school year or by being coached at odd times by a teacher of wide and successful experience in the handling and training of children.

Mrs. Catherine R. Dillon Shepherd, who originated the Mother Goose Inn idea and plays the role of Mother Goose to her kiddy boarders, is a native Georgian, having been born on the site of the Hotel Ansley. As a girl she traveled a good deal, received an excellent education and became quite proficient as a singer and elocutionist. Her husband, A. C. Shepherd, an Atlanta attorney and a member of the American Bar association, came to this country as a boy from England, and, for several years, before entering upon the practice of law, was prominently identified with the work of the United States department of agriculture at Washington, D. C., and later in this city. To the boys and girls at the Mother Goose Inn he is familiarly known as "Popsy Gander."

Mother Goose and Popsy Gander are glad to have children and their parents visit them at any time, and a stop at the Mother Goose Inn while motoring out from Atlanta some pleasant Sunday will afford an instructive as well as a pleasant stop on the way.

Violin Class Gives Recital.

The violin class of Mrs. Bertha Curtis Patterson entertained their friends with an evening of music recently at Steinway hall. The prizes for the greatest improvement during the year were awarded to Masters John Tyler Mauldin and Robert Eleazer. Special mention was made of Master Deneen McCormack, who won the first prize offered by the Junior Music Study club.

Miss Stebbins Is Named Chairman.

Miss Frances Stebbins, 957 Reynolds street, Augusta, Ga., has been appointed transportation chairman for the national convention of Business and Professional Women's clubs, which meets at West Baden, Ind., July 21-26. If fifteen delegates from Georgia make this trip, a private car will be available, and a rate of one and one-half fare for the round trip. This will be a wonderful trip and an inspirational meeting. Those contemplating attending this convention are asked to communicate with Miss Stebbins without delay. This special car will leave Atlanta, so that the rate should be computed from that point.

The Improbable Success of Mr. Owen Hood

By G. K. Chesterton

Of a Somewhat Unlegal Lawyer, Who Liked to Angle Beside a Quiet Stream; And of the Case He Pleaded for Fish.

HEROES who have endured the heavy labor of reading to the end the story of "The Unpresentable Appearance of Colonel Crane" are aware that his achievement was the first of a series of things counted impossible, like the quests of the Arthurian knights. For the purpose of this tale, in which the colonel is but a secondary figure, it is enough to say that he was long known and respected, before his last escapade, as a respectable and retired military man in a residential part of Surrey, with a sunburn complexion and an interest in savage mythology. As a fact, however, he had gathered the sunburn and the savage myths sometime before he had managed to collect the respectability and the suburban residence. In his early youth he had been a traveler of the adventurous and even restless sort; and he only concerns this story because he was a member of a sort of club or clique of young men whose adventurousness verged on extravagances. They were all eccentrics of one kind or another; some professing extreme revolutionary and some extreme reactionary opinions, and some both. Among the latter may be classed Mr. Robert Owen Hood, the somewhat unlegal lawyer who is the hero of this tale.

"Is that Dr. Hunter?" she asked with commonplace curiosity. "Is he standing for parliament?"

Robert Owen Hood was Crane's most intimate and incongruous friend. Hood was from the first as sedentary as Crane was adventurous. Hood was to the end as casual as Crane was conventional. The prefix of Robert Owen was a relic of vague revolutionary tradition in his family. But he inherited along with it a little money that allowed him to neglect the law and cultivate a taste for liberty; and especially for drifting and dreaming in lost corners of the country, especially in the little hills between the Severn and the Thames. In the upper reaches of the latter river is an islet in which he loved especially to sit fishing, a shabby but not commonplace figure clad in gray, with a mane of rust colored hair and a long face with a large chin rather like Napoleon. Beside him, on the occasion now in question, stood the striking contrast of his alert military friend in full traveling kit, being on the point of starting for one of his Odysseys in the South seas.

"Well," demanded the impatient traveler in a tone of remonstrance, "have you caught anything?"

"You once asked me," replied the angler placidly, "what I meant by calling you a materialist. That is what I meant by calling you a materialist."

"If one must be a materialist or a madman," snorted the soldier, "give me materialism."

"On the contrary," replied his friend, "your fad is far madder than mine. And I doubt if it's more fruitful. The moment men like you see a man sitting by a river with a rod, they are insanely impelled to ask him what he has caught. But when you go off to shoot big game, as you call it, nobody asks you what you have caught. Nobody expects you to bring home a hippopotamus for supper. Nobody has ever seen you walking up Pall Mall followed respectfully by a captive giraffe. Your bag of elephants, though enormous, seems singularly unobtrusive; left in the cloak room, no doubt. Personally, I doubt if you ever catch anything. It's all decorously hidden in desert sand and dust and distance. But what I catch is something far more elusive, and as slippery as any fish. It is the soul of England."

"I should think you'd catch a cold if not a fish," answered Crane, "sitting dangling your feet in a pool like that. I like to move about a little more. Dreaming is all very well in its way."

AT this point a symbolic cloud ought to have come across the sun and a certain shadow of mystery and silence rest upon the narrative. For it was at this moment that James Crane, being blind with inspiration, uttered his celebrated prophecy upon which this improbable narrative turns. As was commonly the case with men uttering omens, he was utterly unconscious of anything ominous about what he said. A moment after he would probably not know that he had said it. A moment after, it was as if a cloud of strange shape had indeed passed from the face of the sun.

The prophecy had taken the form of a proverb. In due time the patient, the all suffering reader may learn what proverb. But as it happened, indeed, the conversation had largely consisted of proverbs; as is often the case with men like Hood, whose hearts are with that old English country life from which all the proverbs came.

But it was Crane who had said, in a momentary irritation: "It's all very well to be fond of England; but a man who wants to help England mustn't let the grass grow under his feet."

"And that's just what I want to do," answered Hood. "That's exactly what even your poor tired people in the big towns really want to do. When a wretched clerk walks down Threadneedle street, wouldn't he really be delighted if he could look down and see the grass growing under his feet; a magic green carpet in the middle of the pavement? It would be a fairy tale."

"Well, but he wouldn't sit like a stone as you do," replied the other. "A man might let the grass grow under his feet without actually letting the ivy grow up his legs. That sounds like a fairy tale, too, if you like, but there's no proverb to recommend it."

"O, there are proverbs on my side, if you come to that," answered Hood laughing. "I might remind you about the rolling stone that gathers no moss."

"Well, who wants to gather moss, except a few fussy old ladies?" demanded Crane.

"Yes, I'm a rolling stone, I suppose; and I go rolling round the earth as the earth goes rolling round the sun. But I'll tell you what; there's one kind of stone that does really gather moss."

"And what is that, my rambling geologist?"

"A gravestone," said Crane.

There was a silence, and Hood sat gazing with his owlish face at the dim pools in which the dark woods were mirrored.

At last he said: "Moss isn't the only thing found on that. Sometimes there is the word "Resurgan."

"Well, I hope you will," said Crane genially, "but the trumpet will have to be pretty loud to wake you up. It's my opinion you'll be late for the day of judgment."

"Now, if this were a true dramatic dialogue," remarked Hood, "I should answer that it would be better for you if you were. But it hardly seems a Christian sentiment for a parting. Are you really off today?"

"Yes, tonight," replied his friend. "Sure you won't come with me to the Cannibal islands?"

"I prefer my own island," said Mr. Owen Hood.

When his friend had gone he continued to gaze abstractedly at the green reflections under the bank above it; nor did he change his posture, and hardly moved his head. This might be partly explained by the still habits of an angler; but to tell the truth, it was not easy to discover whether the solitary lawyer really wanted to catch any fish. He often carried a volume of Izaak Walton in his pocket, having a love of the old English literature as of the old English landscape. But if he was an angler, he certainly was not a very complete angler.

But the truth is that Owen Hood had not been quite candid with his friend about the spell that held him to the particular islet in the upper Thames. If he had said, as he was quite capable of saying, that he expected to catch the miraculous draught of fishes or the whale that swallowed Jonah, or even the great sea serpent, his expressions would have been merely symbolical. But they would have been the symbol of something as unique and unattaining. For Mr. Owen Hood was really fishing for something that few fishermen ever catch; and that was a dream of his boyhood, and something that had happened on that lonely spot long ago.

YEARS before, when he was a very young man, he had sat fishing on that island one evening as the twilight turned to dark, and two or three broad bands of silver were all that was left of the sunset behind the darkening trees. The birds were dropping out of the sky and there was no sound except the soft noises of the river. Suddenly and without a sound, as comes a veritable vision, a girl had come out of the woods opposite. She spoke to him across the stream, asking him he hardly knew what, which he answered he hardly knew how. She was dressed in white and carried a bunch of bluebells loose in her hand; her hair that looked like gold was low on her forehead; she was pale like ivory and her pale eyelids had a sort of flutter as of nervous emotion.

There came on him a strangling sense of stupidity; but he must have managed to speak civilly, for she lingered; and he must have said something to amuse her, for she laughed. Then followed the incident he could never analyze, though he was an introspective person. Making a gesture towards something, she managed to drop her loose blue flowers into the water. He knew not what sort of whirlwind was in his head, but it seemed to him that prodigious things were happening, as in an epic of the gods, of which all visible things were but the small signs. Before he knew where he was, he was standing dripping on the other bank; for he had splashed in somehow and saved the bunch as if it had been a baby drowning. Of all the things she said he could only recall the sentence that repeated itself perpetually in his mind, "You'll catch your death of cold."

He only caught the cold and not the death; yet even the notion of the latter did not somehow seem disproportionate. The doctor, to whom he was forced to give some sort of explanation of his immersion, was much interested in the story, or what he heard of it, having a pleasure in working out the pedigrees of the county families and the relationships of the best houses in the neighborhood. By some rich process of elimination, he deduced that the lady must be Miss Elizabeth Seymour from Marley court. The doctor spoke with a respectful relish of such things; he was a rising young practitioner named Hunter, afterwards a neighbor of Colonel Crane. He shared Hood's admiration for the local landscape; and said it was owing to the beautiful way in which Marley court was kept up.

"It's landowners like that," he said, "who have made England. It's all very well for radicals to talk; but where should we be without the landowners?"

"O, I'm for landowners," said Hood rather wearily. "I like them so much I should like more of them. More and more landowners. Hundreds and thousands of them."

IT IS doubtful whether Dr. Hunter quite followed his enthusiasm, or even his meaning, but Hood had reason later remember this little conversation; so far as he was in a mood to remember any conversations except one.

Anyhow, it were vain to disguise from the intelligent though exhausted reader that this was probably the true origin of Mr. Hood's habit of sitting solidly on that island and gazing abstractedly at that bank. All through the years when he felt his first youth was passing, and even when he seemed to be drifting towards middle age, he haunted that valley like a ghost, waiting for someting that never came again. It is by no means certain, in the last and most subtle analysis, that he even expected it to come again. Somehow it seemed too like a miracle for that. Only this place had become the shrine of the miracle; and he felt that if anything did happen there, he must be there to see. And so it came about that he was there to see when things did happen; and rather queer things had happened before the end.

One morning he saw an extraordinary thing. That indeed would not have seemed extraordinary to most people; but it was quite apocalyptic to him. A dusty man came out of the woods carrying what looked like dusty pieces of timber, and proceeded to erect on the bank what turned out to be a sort of boarding, a large wooden notice board on which was written in enormous letters, "To Be Sold," with remarks in smaller letters about the land and the name of the land agents. For the first time for years Owen Hood stood up in his place and left his fishing; and shouted questions across the river. The man answered with the greatest patience and good humor; but it is probable that he went away convinced that he had been talking to a wandering lunatic.

That was the beginning of what was for Owen Hood a crawling nightmare. The change advanced slowly, but it seemed to him all the time that he was helpless and paralyzed in its presence precisely as a man is paralyzed in an actual nightmare. He laughed with an almost horrible laughter to think that a man is a modern society is supposed to be master of his fate and free to pursue his pleasures; when he has not power to prevent the daylight he looks on from being darkened, or the air he breathes from being turned to poison, or the silence that is his full posession from being shaken with the cacophony of hell. There was something, he thought grimly, in Dr. Hunter's simple admiration for agricultural aristocracy. There was something in quite primitive and even barbarous aristocracy. Feudal lords went in fitfully for fights and forays; they put collars around the necks of some serfs; they occasionally put halters round the necks of a few of them. But they did not wage war day and night against the five senses of man.

There had appeared first on the river bank small sheds and shanties, for workmen who seemed to be rather lengthily occupied in putting up larger sheds and shanties. To the last, when the factory was finished, it was not easy for a traditional eye to distinguish between what was temporary and what was permanent. It did not look as if any of it could be permanent, if there were anything natural in the nature of things, so to speak. But whatever was the name and nature of that amorphous thing, it swelled and increased and even multiplied without clear division; until there stood on the river bank a great black patchwork block of buildings terminating in a tall brick factory chimney from which a stream of smoke mounted into the silent sky. A heap of some sort of debris, scrapped iron and similar things, lay in the foreground; and a broken bar red with rust had fallen on the spot where the girl had been standing when she brought bluebells out of the wood.

HE did not leave his island. Rural and romantic and sedentary as he may have seemed, he was not the son of an old revolutionist for nothing. It was not altogether in vain that his father had called him Robert Owen or that his friends had sometimes called him Robin Hood. Some-

BOUDOIR MIRRORS of America

ANNE MORGAN

MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT

At the left is Anne Morgan, who has the Morgan mind and knows how to make things hum (except when they hum "I've a Chicken in France"). In thhe opposite mirror is Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont (Copyright, Paul Thompson), who stipulated that men should be employed only as servants at the Women's Party Headquarters.

Anne Morgan's Plan to Re-Chickenize France Almost Comes to Grief

How One of America's Most Influential Women Works Her Million Dollar Morgan Mind on Some Big Problems and Solves Them—Mrs. Henry Ford Attends One of Her "Launching Luncheons" But Doesn't Ride in a Ford.

BY MRS. ANONYMOUS

ANNE MORGAN got home from France the other day and everybody is wondering what she is going to do next. She is an international commuter. But this time she's come to stay for a while.

Taken all in all, she is, it seems to me, the most influential woman in America. That is, she could do successfully anything she would undertake. Her name is known everywhere. She has money, and what is even more important, she has the marvelous Morgan mind. She sees things in the large. Small things do not interest her. Just giving money doesn't appeal to her. She wants to work something out herself. She wants the pull and tug of the things. She wants to feel things happening. No long distance philanthropy for her.

Anne Morgan thinks in terms of millions. The way she spends money when she gets started would scare any average woman's club cold. She knows that to make money you've got to spend money, and that is something most women haven't found out. To interest her a "cause" must not only be big, it must be dramatic. Having made up her mind that a thing should be done, she decides in her own mind how it should be done, then she hires brains to work out the details. And having hired the best brains she can buy, she lets them alone. She is one of the few women who know how to delegate details. She simply won't bother with them. She uses her energy for the bigger things, just as men do.

Yes, if we could get Anne Morgan's mind working on some of our great problems, something would happen. She'd take the short cut. Now that she has finished her big job in devastated France she is all ready for something else. What is it going to be? Some say romance is flirting with her. I don't know. One never can tell. She never was a wall-flower.

ANNE MORGAN did do a big job in France. She could find more things to do and more ways to do them than ten average people could have thought of.

Soon after she began her work some one discovered that there were no cooking vessels in France, and that somebody told Anne about it.

"Well, all right," she said, "we'll re-kitchenize France." And so they did.

Also somebody discovered that there were no chickens in France after the war, and somebody told her about that, too.

"All right," she said, "then we'll re-chickenize France."

And bravely they started in. But, all unknown to Anne, that campaign came very near coming to grief, all because of over-enthusiasm on the part of one of the promoters.

It happened this way. This promoter persuaded a magazine to get behind this worthy movement to re-chickenize France, and Maria Thompson Davies, who had just got on the best seller list with "The Melting of Molly," was induced to help the cause by writing about it. The scheme was for every reader to give a dime to buy an egg for an incubator in France. So many dimes would mean an incubator full of eggs, and so many incubators full of eggs would mean a chicken farm, and incidentally a job for a disabled soldier. After a while the donor must give twenty-five cents "to feed the chicken," and so the scheme went.

Well, the dimes and the quarters fairly poured in, and before anybody could realize it several chicken farms were in full swing in the devastated areas of France. So far so good. The scheme was working in tip-top fashion when suddenly something happened to give it a setback. After all, an egg in an incubator in France wasn't anything to get excited over, and something must be done to keep the interest from lagging. So a very attractive button was designed and every donor received one.

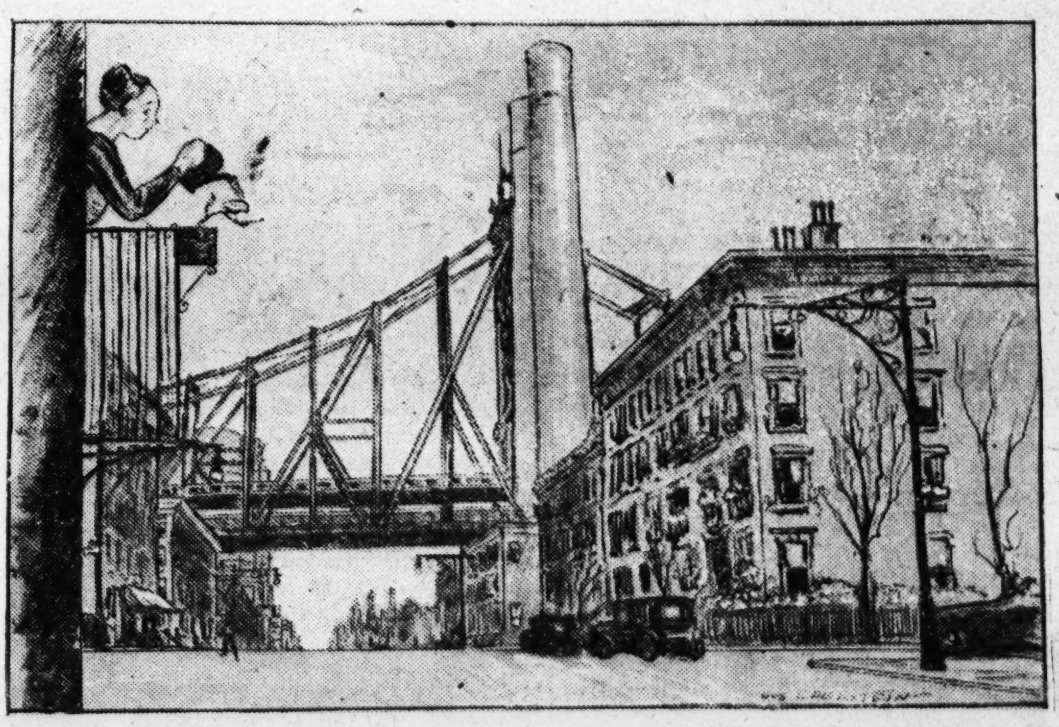

FOR a time all went well. But after a while the boys who had come back from France began to sport those buttons in their lapels. It didn't appeal to wives and sweethearts. The buttons said, in red letters on a cream white background, "I have a chicken in France."

You could understand how some of the wives and sweethearts felt about it. Anyway, in order to save the situation, Anne Morgan ordered several thousand of those buttons scrapped. Things looked dark for a time, but meanwhile the eggs began to hatch and her dream came true. France really was re-chickenized.

The best and most striking example of the Morgan feminine mind in action is in the so-called "Good Will Tours" to France. This was her very own idea. It should be a lesson to the women who are worrying along with little schemes.

She figured in cold blood one night that she needed just about one million dollars to finish what she had started in France. And she needed that million right away. The American people had already obeyed the injunction to "give until it hurts."

Every woman in the country is dying to know what Sutton Place really looks like. And here it is. Sutton Place is so quaint. A regular rus in urbe, and also recherche. A real flower, right in the middle of New York! Not so long ago Sutton Place was just one of those East Side streets 'way over by the East river and now it's being dubbed Millionaire Maiden's row and the old timers of the neighborhood are so used to the gas from Rolls Royces that they won't even bow to their friends from the gas house district around the corner.

New York NOT So Bad

How the Metropolis Is Trying Hard to Live Down the Wholly Undeserved Reputation It Thinks Books, Plays and the Movies Have Given It, and to Show Its Visitors That It's Really a Highly Moral Place

Miss Grace Gerard, the jiu-jitsu expert, teaching a New York policewoman how to deal with mashers, gunmen and other undesirables.

A police raid on one of the vice dens which fill New York in the movies and which New Yorkers think give an utterly false impression of their city

IT MIGHT be supposed that New York city is a city too large, too engrossed in its affairs of business and pleasure, to be worried about the reputation it bears with the rest of the world, but such is not at all the case.

New Yorkers are becoming as jealous of their city's good name as the citizens of any small town Main street, and just now they are making the most painstaking and earnest efforts to prove that the metropolis is not the disgracefully wicked and abandoned place it is so often pictured in the movies and plays and in novels and short stories.

In the gathering of the democrats for their national convention in New York this month the city thinks it sees an opportunity to demonstrate that it does not in the least deserve the bad things that are said of it by the playwrights, scenario writers and novelists.

City officials, police and citizens of every party and creed are uniting in a mighty effort to show the thousands of convention visitors from all parts of the United States that New York is cruelly libeled when it is pictured as a place where every farmer is sure to be sold a gold brick and every innocent country girl and struggling young man from the small town to be surrounded with the most insidious temptations of every sort.

It may disappoint a good many of the convention visitors to find on the Bowery and along the great white way none of the shocking scenes of vice and crime they have been led to expect at every step, but the New Yorkers say they can't help that. They declare the metropolis is not nearly so wicked as the average large city and they think it high time for the rest of the country to know what a spotless town it really is.

The movement to protect New York's good name got a new impetus the other day when it was discovered that certain sightseeing bus operators were planning to reap large profits by staging, for the benefit of the convention visitors, a number of fake vice dens. In various parts of the city were to be shown artful representations of the scenes of wickedness the movies, plays and novels have led them to believe are to be found on every hand in New York.

On the Bowery, for example, there were to be fitted up a number of dance halls, where every night, when the busses full of sightseers arrived, painted women would be fleecing sailors and notorious characters of the underworld flourishing guns and knives as if there were not a policeman within a thousand miles.

ALONG Broadway were to be several gilded night clubs where—so the strangers in New York would be told—the most risque dances were performed every evening for the benefit of jaded Wall street millionaires. Needless to say, the busses would always arrive just a few minutes too late to see one of the dances.

In Chinatown there were to be arranged clever imitations of opium dens, where white women and slant-eyed men would be shown sprawling on couches, apparently half stupified by the fumes of the narcotic pipe.

And in Hell's Kitchen and other neighborhoods with unsavory names the visitors would be led into various back rooms and cellars, where movie actors made up as thugs, thieves and gunmen would be shown plotting their next crime and dividing the spoils of their last ones.

To give a greater semblance of reality to all these deceptions the sightseeing bus operators planned to have their cars include in their trips the scenes of many actual New York crimes.

"Here is the door," the guides were to shout through their megaphones, "through which Harry Thaw passed on his way to kill Stanford White.

"On your left you see the house where Dorothy King, the Broadway butterfly, was murdered.

"This is the scene of the murder that sent Lieutenant Becker, of the New York police force, to the electric chair.

"Over there is the apartment house where poor Louise Lawson, the Texas beauty and friend of the Wall street financier, was strangled in her bed."

And so it was to go through a long list of New York's crimes that have been broadcast through the newspapers from one end of the country to the other.

In return for the money they paid for their trips on the sightseeing busses the convention visitors were to be given plenty of thrills. They were to be supplied with supposedly genuine evidence that would enable them to go back home and tell their friends that New York was fully as bad as it is so often pictured—that they had seen with their own eyes the gilded gambling hells, the haunts where gunmen argue over the prices of human life and the mysterious Chinatown dens where, in an atmosphere heavy with the odors of chop suey and burning opium, innocent young white girls are lured to their ruin by yellow skinned villians.

But the artful plans of the sightseeing bus operators, certain restaurant proprietors, and others for reaping large profits through staging fake dens of vice for the edification of convention visitors have been nipped in the bud. The police will not permit anything of the sort, nor will they even allow the exploitation of the scenes where crimes have actually occurred.

FROM high official and unofficial sources the word has gone forth that New York must give the lie to the evil reputation that has been given it in plays and the movies and in so many novels and short stories, and anybody who tries to make the metropolis appear anything but a spotless town will be courting all kinds of trouble.

Curiously enough, it was from the city's Chinatown that came the first protest against the practice of leading sightseers about to the scenes of crimes and the plan to open numerous fake dens of vice in order to gratify the visitors' desires for thrills and give them what they expect to find in New York.

The Chinese Benevolent society has been disturbed for a time by the way Chinatown is exploited as a place where tong wars are a frequent occurrence and where hardly a day passes that some white girl is not lured to ruin or death. It says that guides who bring parties of tourists to the section add many sensational details to crimes that have actually taken place there, and often invent purely fictitious ones to satisfy the morbid curiosity of their patrons.

When the officers of the society heard that a plan was on foot to stage during the democratic national convention a number of fake opium dens and other dives in and around Chinatown, they decided that this was more than they could bear and went straight to the police with their troubles. In Deputy Police Commissioner Simon they found a sympathetic listener. When he began to investigate the complaints of the indignant Chinese, he uncovered a widespread and ingeniously devised plan to amuse the convention visitors and make money out of them by leading them to carefully staged imitations of the vice and crime that are supposed to prevail in New York. No arrests were made, but the promoters of these enterprises were told that unless they were promptly dropped, there would be.

There were loud protests from the men who had expected to reap a rich harvest from this questionable enterprise and who had already invested considerable money in it, but the police officials were unmoved by them. They understand too well how jealous the better classes of citizens are becoming over the city's good name, and how anxious they are to have the city present its most spotless front to the convention visitors.

The bare-legged waitresses in this Greenwich Village restaurant will wear stockings while the Democratic convention is in session as a protection to the city's reputation

THOSE who should know New York well declare that neither Chinatown nor the Bowery nor any of the other sections that used to be so notorious for their wickedness are any longer the sort of places they are pictured in movies and in plays and novels. Long ago they all reformed, and their chief concern nowadays is to live down their evil reputation. A stranger in New York who visits one of these sections expecting to find the vice and crime that were rampant there years ago is in for a great disappointment.

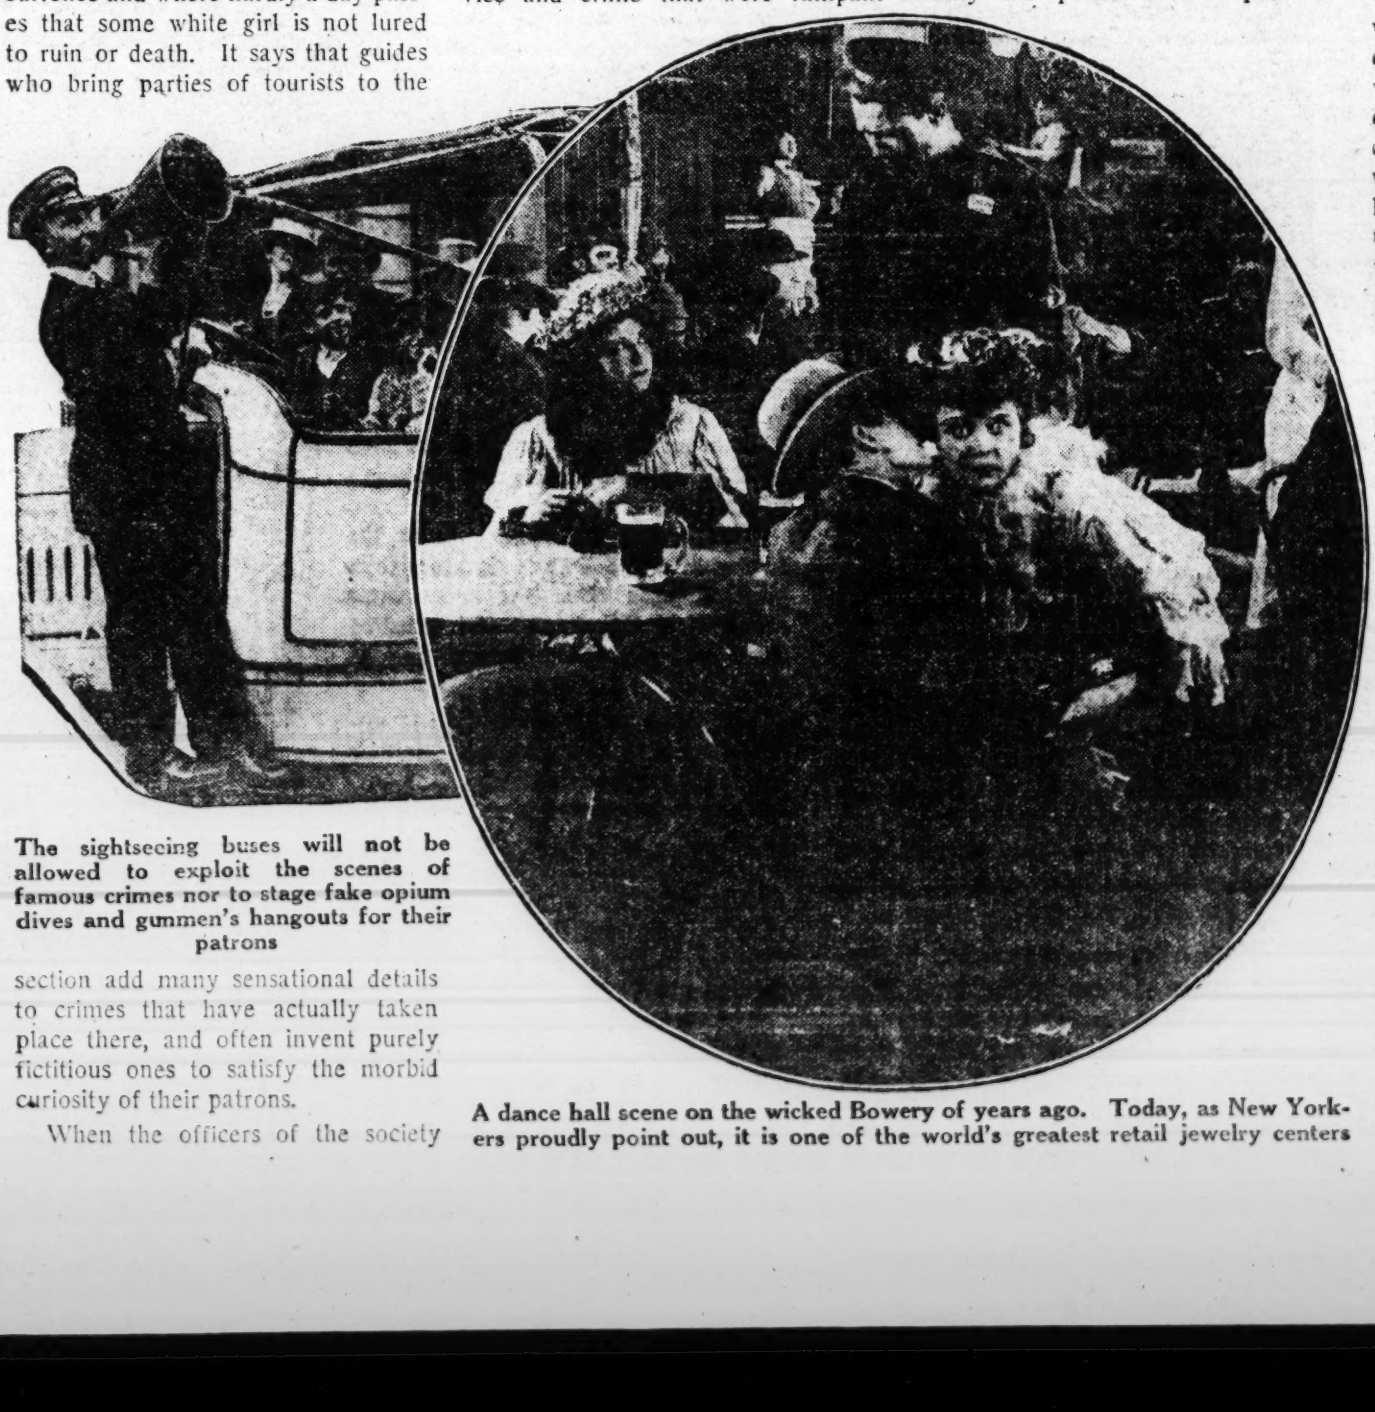

Every now and then Chinatown has a little tong war, but it is a trivial affair compared with the bloody conflicts which the megaphone men on the sightseeing busses like to describe. Occasionally some foolish white girl runs away to Chinatown, but it is usually the Chinese themselves who notify the police of her presence there and have them take her back home.

The Chinese Benevolent society has any quantity of facts and figures to prove that human life and a girl's honor are a great deal safer in Chinatown than in many more pretentious localities. A large percentage of the crimes that stain Chinatown's record nowadays are, they say, due to the sightseers who swarm there.

The Bowery is another district which has undergone an amazing change for the better since the days when it really was one of the toughest places in the whole world. The dance halls, cheap saloons and other vicious resorts that made it infamous have vanished, and so, to a large extent, have the lodging houses where ten or fifteen cents buys a bed for the night.

The Bowery boasts today of being a prosperous and law abiding commercial district. It is one of the greatest retail jewelry sections in the world, and the members of its flourishing and energetic board of trade would give a good deal to wipe out the memory of the street's bad reputation which was spread all over the world by the famous song, and which is kept alive today by books and plays that pretend to tell the truth about New York life—but don't.

It is much the same way with Hell's Kitchen, the district bounded by Twenty-fourth and Fiftieth streets, Eighth avenue and the Hudson river. Less than twenty years ago desperate gansters made this their battle ground and levied cruel tribute from the terrorized merchants. Today the gangsters are all in prison or have turned to more honest pursuits and the district which still bears the fearsome name is declared to be as peaceful and law abiding as any country village.

The sightseeing buses will not be allowed to exploit the scenes of famous crimes nor to stage fake opium dives and gunmen's hangouts for their patrons

A dance hall scene on the wicked Bowery of years ago. Today, as New Yorkers proudly point out, it is one of the world's greatest retail jewelry centers

Gay Duke of Westminster

How the Yachting Cruis
Brought t
the Duke's
Wi

"Eluding the outstretched arm of her pursuer, the Duchess sprang to the rail and flung overboard the things she carried. Evening gowns, silk stockings, slippers, jewel boxes, vanity cases and intimate articles of lacy lingerie went sailing down to the moon-kissed waters of the Mediterranean."

WHO was the pretty Spanish dancer of whom the Duchess of Westminster became so jealous that she gathered up all the senorita's clothes and jewels she could lay her hands on and flung them into the waters of the Mediterranean?

This is the question that is interesting the gossips since London began to buzz with the reports that irreconcilable differences have arisen between the Westminsters as a result of the attention the gay Duke showed the brunette stage beauty whom he invited for a cruise on his palatial yacht last winter.

Almost everybody thinks it was Raquel Meller, the fascinating dancer of whom King Alfonso of Spain has long been an earnest admirer. It would be quite like the Duke to have been entertaining Senorita Meller, the gossips think, for ever since he was old enough to begin distributing pearl necklaces and diamonds there has hardly been a famous footlight beauty with whom he has not been on the friendliest terms. And this alluring Spaniard is quite the type to appeal to his discriminating taste.

But the identity of the dancer is not at all essential to the story that is told of what happened that night on the yacht when the Duchess' patience with her husband's fondness for smiles other than her own reached the breaking point.

And what a story it is that all the gossips are rolling their tongues over! The author of the old-fashioned melodrama or a modern society problem play could ask nothing more surprising and thrilling for his big scene than what is said to have happened in the senorita's stateroom and on the deck just outside.

The main details have leaked out through servants who sailed on the Westminster yacht last winter and the rest are being supplied by observers who have suspected for a long time that the Duke's second marriage was headed for another disaster like that which wrecked his first.

While the Westminster yacht lay off Nice, according to the story that is going the rounds of the fashionable clubs and drawing rooms, the beautiful Spaniard arrived on board and was installed in one of the staterooms reserved for guests. The Duke devoted much time to her and the Duchess—well, for the first few days she seemed as cordial to her as she was to any of the other beauties her husband was frequently entertaining.

The explosion that is believed to have wrecked the Westminsters' domestic happiness beyond all hope of repair came on the evening of the third day after the arrival of the Carmen-like queen with the velvety black eyes and hair.

It was nearly dinner time and she and the several other guests and the host and hostess had retired to their staterooms to put on the formal dress which the etiquette of the yacht demanded.

Suddenly the peaceful quiet of that evening on the Mediterranean was disturbed by the sound of angry women's voices. The noise of what was evidently a bitter altercation came from the stateroom occupied by the beauty whom the servants and crew of the yacht felt sure was the famous dancer.

An instant later the few curious eyes that were there to be turned in the direction of the quarrel saw the door of the stateroom flung open and the Duchess of Westminster come rushing out, closely followed by the pretty Spaniard.

The Duchess was fully dressed for the evening, but the dancer looked as if she were unclad except for her shoes and stockings and the filmy negligee that slipped from her bare shoulders.

What was most remarkable of all was the fact that the Duchess' arms were piled high with wearing apparel and other things, such as could be gathered up only in some fashionable woman's boudoir.

Eluding the outstretched arm of her pursuer, the Duchess sprang to the rail and flung her burden overboard. Evening gowns, silk stockings, slippers, jewel boxes, vanity cases and intimate articles of lacy lingerie went sailing down to the moon kissed waters of the Mediterranean.

JUDGING from the amount of baggage the dancer had brought on board and the quantity of things the Duchess hurled over the rail it looked surprisingly as if the Spanish beauty had lost practically everything except the little she wore.

What revenge would the fiery Spaniard have taken for this treatment of her belongings? What further punishment would the angry Duchess have tried to inflict on the guest who was so unwelcome to her?

This cannot be told. Before the two women had time to do more than glare at each other the Duke came hurrying to the scene and hustled them both out of the gaze of curious eyes.

The Duke and Duchess did not appear for dinner that evening. Neither did the young woman who had lost her wardrobe, and the rest of the guests were served for the most part in their staterooms. The atmosphere on the yacht was altogether too tense to think of attempting to go through with the merry dinner party that had been planned.

The dancer succeeded in borrowing enough misfit garments to permit her making her escape that very evening from the scene of her humiliation.

Raquel Meller, the Spanish dancer who so captivated King Alfonso and is believed to have added the Duke of Westminster to her long list of distinguished admirers.

But neither the Duke nor the Duchess was on deck to bid her goodby when she followed her empty bags and boxes down the companionway and stepped into the launch that had been ordered to take her ashore.

Soon after this the Westminsters' yachting cruise that had been expected to continue for several weeks was brought to a sudden end, and they returned to London. At once fashionable society began to be filled with the most positive reports that at last the gay Duke and his charming second wife had reached the parting of the ways.

Even the most conservative newspapers, which never print anything concerning such rich and fashionable figures as the Westminsters until they are very sure of their facts, have hinted broadly that the Duke and Duchess are separating and that a divorce is likely to follow.

According to the gossip here the incident of the Spanish dancer was the spectacular climax of a long series of incidents which arose to disturb the Duchess' peace of mind during the trip to the Mediterranean and finally convinced her that it was hopeless for her to continue trying to get along with her gay husband.

Wherever she went she was always meeting other beauties to whom the Duke was a great deal more attentive than she thought any husband should be. And the worry over what might be happening when she was not at his side at last became too torturing for her to endure.

What the Duchess is said to have done with the clothing and jewelry of the Spanish dancer is cited by her friends as good proof of the overwrought condition to which her nerves had been brought by the Duke's irresistible fondness for bright smiles and pretty faces.

One thing that is said to have been particularly disturbing to the Duchess was the presence on the Riviera last winter of Miss Gertie Millar, the former Gaiety stage beauty, who was thought to have had a great deal to do with the Duke's first divorce.

THE fact that Miss Millar was accompanied by the Earl of Dudley, to whom she has since been married, seemed to make no differnece with the Duke's renewing his friendship with her and seeing her a great deal.

Except for a growing plumpness, which the Duke did not seem to find in the least objectionable, Gertie Millar is quite as alluring as she was years ago when she was the peerless favorite of the London stage and had more rich and distinguished admirers at her feet than probably any other theatrical star ever had.

The Duke's interest in Gertie Millar is said to have come perilously near to driving his wife from a fashionable restaurant at Cannes one evening.

No sooner had he and the Duchess begun their dinner than he left the table to go and talk with Miss Millar and her fiance. who had just been seated at the other side of the room.

The Duchess trie dto hide her furious impatience for what she thought a very generous length of time. Then she rose and commanded the waiter to lead her to the cloakroom and get her wraps.

The Duke looked up from his absorbed conversation with the former Gaiety girl just in time to see what his wife was about to do. If he had been a minute later in returning to her table she would have been gone, leaving him to finish his dinner alone—or with the bewitching Gertie and her Earl.

There were many other similar incidents to supply the gossips with evidence of the growing friction between the Duke and the Duchess.

Everybody is curious to know just what it was that impelled the Duchess to invade the dancer's stateroom, fill her arms with the layd's belongings and fling them overboard. Perhaps it will be revealed when the Westminsters' romance ends, as everybody fears it will, in the divorce court.

At the time of her marriage the Duchess of Westminster was quoted as telling some of her friends that she preferred for a husband a man with a past—that this made him worth marrying.

It is probable that she has changed her mind on this subject since she has seen how many of the pretty faces that figured in her husband's past keep bobbing up into the present.

It is curious that the same bewitching stage beauty who helped along the estrangement of the Duke and his first wife should also figure in the quarrels that have driven his second marriage on the rocks.

Oil in the Can

By Jonathan Brook

A Splendidly Told, Stirring Tale of The "Sport of Kings" With Its Climax in a Heart-Speeding Word-Picture of a Great Horse Race

"OIL in the can, 's what she is," exulted Jockey Art Wamsly. "Me just a-settin' here takin' the air, and her a-breezin'. Lordy, feel the run 'is filly's got. Oil in the can."

It was no ordinary exhilaration that coursed through the boy's arteries. His heart pounded with the excitement of an early morning gallop on a Tucky Stakes starter which was, as he put it and she demonstrated to the sun and two other spectators, full of run.

The filly, a small, slender bay, was Cynthia, potential violator of tradition as a winner of the Tucky Stakes, hitherto won only by colts. The sun was the Kentucky April morning sun, and the two other spectators were James B. Bellman, millionaire sportsman, and Pig Molone, his trainer.

"Straight as a string," gloated Pig Molone.

"Very pretty," said James B. Bellman, without enthusiasm. He had never ridden.

But Arthur Wamsly had ridden for years, and now, at the top of his career, was readying a filly that looked good for the Stakes. His boyish soul, which nine years of tracking had failed to age, thrilled to the morning air, the racing prospect and the filly's speed.

"The little dickens," he whispered, as they flew around the last turn. "When I pushed 'at bottle into the crib 'smorning, grabbed it with one hand and then grabbed the comfort with the other. Gonna keep warm and 'at comfort."

It was not of the filly the jockey was thinking, now, but of little Arthur Wamsly, Jr., darn near a year old and smart as the dickens.

"Oil in the can!" said the boy, dismounting.

"Fulla run?" queried Pig Molone, in some pride.

"Run?" echoed Art Wamsly. "Give 'at filly an even break with 'er shadow and she'll beat it home as far's from here to Hongkong."

Pig Molone laughed in satisfaction. James B. Bellman, millionaire sportsman, smiled at the boy's earnest exaggeration.

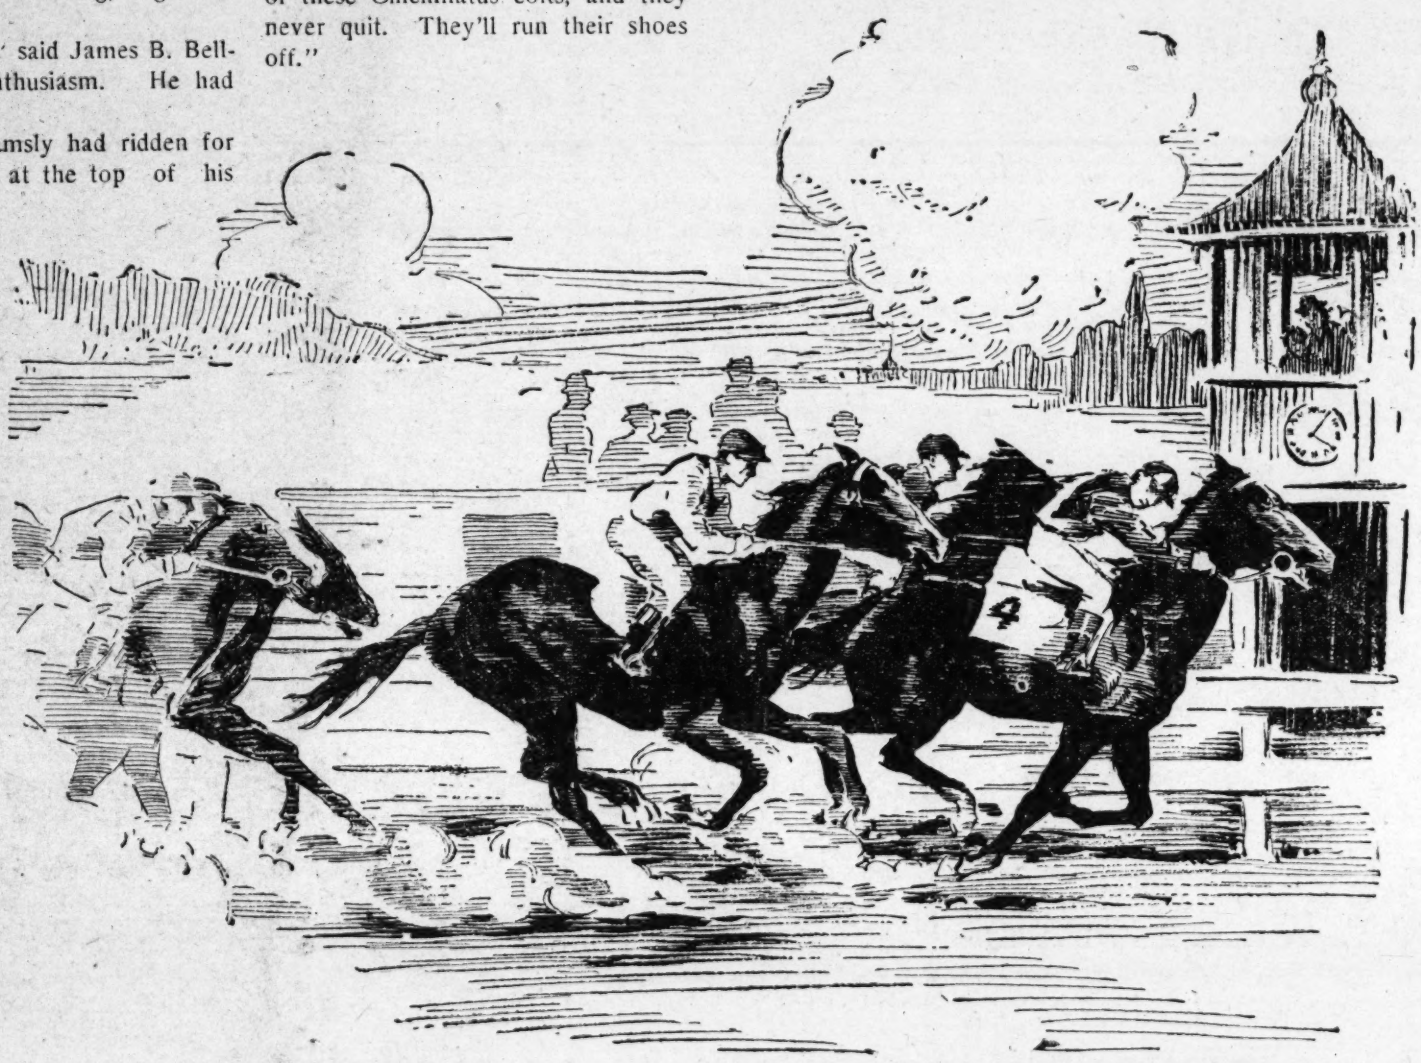

"That's all this morning, Art," said Molone.

"Guess I'll go home and get some breakfast then," the boy replied, and was off on the run. His excuse was food, but the coffee cooled before his wife, Tilda, could make him put the baby back on the floor and sit down to eat.

The meal was a joyous one, for Art recited his morning's thrill and his old hopes, now manifestly in sight of realization.

"But don't they say a filly can't win the stakes?" asked his wife, ever matter of fact.

"Only because one never has," he declared, stoutly. "But I know this Cynthia filly. She's got the foot, and she's game. I've ridden any number of these Cincinnatus colts, and they never quit. They'll run their shoes off."

The Prince and the pauper came fighting but they were too late. It was Arthur Wamsly's race.

"Still a filly's never won the stakes," said Tilda.

This filly's never started in 'em. And never any other filly outa her fam'ly. She's the fastest thing in the race, and she's got the heart. That puts it up to me, and I can ride a winner as well's the next one, if I do say it myself."

They left it that way and went on dreaming their dream.

MUCH has been said of the way of a maid with a man, and no great amount of light has been shed on the subject. A great deal more might be set down regarding the way of a wealthy sportsman with a horse, but even less illumination would result.

For, neither reason nor rhyme enters into the calculation of a man who has never ridden or driven, curried, fed or bedded horseflesh, but who, despite these things, invests his money in horses and expects thereafter to race them with pleasure or profit. This is a fair statement but to avoid argument, it is just as well to limit its scope to the activities of James B. Bellman.

Pig Molone was as happy with the workout of the filly Cynthia as little Art Wamsly had been. She was now ready to justify his judgment, and Pig Molone was glad. But James B. Bellman calmly drowned his case with cold water.

"Well, Mr. Bellman," said Pig, "She looks purty good, don't you think?"

"Yes, for a filly, she does," agreed Bellman. "A filly's never won the Stakes, and I want to win the Stakes," declared Bellman. "Get me a colt."

"But Mr. Bellman," exclaimed Pig, horrified, "this is a different kind of filly. She's a Cincinnatus, and she has the speed and the courage to go anywhere."

"In a field of big, strong colts? The only filly to start? At a mile and a quarter?"

"Art Wamsly can win anything with 'is filly," Pig asserted, determinedly.

"Can't see it," snapped Bellman. "I'm in this thing to win the Tucky Stakes, and I want a colt to win with. Get me a colt."

"Well, of course, if that's the way you feel about it,—"Pig faltered.

"Exactly the way I feel. Get me a colt."

"There's none can be bought except this Windblown of Maguinn's" said Pig.

"I think that's the colt I want. They tell me he can win. We'll put Wamsly up on him, and take the race. That's my program. Get Windblown for me," ordered Bellman with an air of finality as he turned away.

"Yes, sir." Poor Pig Molone was crestfallen.

When little Art Wamsly returned to the stables and heard the news, he was heartbroken. After the manner in which the little filly had trained on and made speed, and particularly following the splendid workout of the morning, he could scarcely believe his ears.

"How's he know Windblown can take 'at race?" demanded Wamsly.

"Ask him."

"And leave 'at little filly Cynthia out of it?"

Pig nodded.

"After all them Cincinnatus colts have done, — Cynic, and Cynosure, and Cinch?" asked Wamsly, in a tone of wavering disbelief.

The second day after that Windblown pranced into the Bellman stables. And the next morning Arthur took out the high spirited black colt.

"Well, little fellow," Bellman asked later in the day. "What do you think of Windblown, now that you've had a leg up on him?"

"Good colt," said Wamsly. "Darn good colt, Mr. Bellman. Lots of run in him, and he's strong."

"We'll win the Stakes with him, won't we?"

"We might, at that, the boy agreed uneasily. "That is, unless—well, I figure the colt's a little tricky."

"Is that all?" and Bellman essayed to smile away the jockey's misgivings.

"Well, they say he's not schooled to break quick, and I'm afraid he's not honest, Mr. Bellman, and—"

But here Bellman broke into a boisterous, hearty laugh that brooked no interruption. When he had finished, he patted Wamsly on the back, at once in condescension and understanding.

"I see, I see," Bellman said, "you times, indeed, his soul sank within him with a mortal sickness that was near to suicide, but more often he marched up and down in a militant fashion, being delighted to see the tall wild flowers waving on the banks like flags within a stone's throw of all he hated, and muttering. "Throw out the banners on the outer wall." He had already, when the estate of Marley court was broken up for building, taken some steps to establish himself on the island, had built a sort of hut there in which it was possible to picnic for considerable periods. In front of this he would stand, his Napoleonic chin resting on his chest and seeming to lengthen with everlasting obstinacy as he watched the opposite shore. And as he watched he saw something else.

One morning when dawn was still radiant behind the dark factory and light lay in a satin sheen upon the water, there crept out upon that satin something like a thickening thread of a different color and material. It was a thin ribbon of some other liquid that did not mingle with the water but lay on top of it wavering like a worm; and Owen Hood watched it as a man watches a snake. It looked like a snake, having opalescent colors not without intrinsic beauty; but to him it was a symbolic snake; like the serpent that destroyed Eden. A few days afterward there were a score of snakes covering the surface, little crawling rivers that moved on the river, but did not mix with it, being as alien as witch's oil. Later there came darker liquids with no pretensions to beauty, black and brown flakes of grease that floated heavily; and it seemed to Hood that the color of the water underneath was slowly changing to a dull inky indigo.

It was highly characteristic of Hood that to the last he was rather hazy about the nature and purposes of the factory; and therefore about the ingredients of the chemicals that were flowing into the river; beyond the fact that they were mostly of the oily sort and floated on the water in flakes and lumps, and that something resembling petrol seemed to predominate, used perhaps rather for power than raw material. He had heard a rustic rumor that the enterprise was devoted to hair dye. It smelt rather like a soap factory. So far as he ever understood it, he gathered that it was devoted to what might be considered as a golden mean between hair dye and soap, some kind of new and highly hygienic cosmetics.

There had been a yet more feverish fashion in these things since Professor Hake had written his great book proving that cosmetics were of all things the most hygienic. And Hood had seen many of the meadows of his childhood now brightened and adorned by large notices inscribed, "Why Grow Old?" with the portrait of a young woman grinning in a regrettable manner. The appropriate name on the notices was Bliss, and he gathered that it all had something to do with the great factory.

Resolved to know a little more than this about the matter, he began to make inquiries and complaints, and engaged in a correspondence which ended in an actual interview with some of the principal persons involved. The correspondence had gone on for a long time before it came anywhere near to anything so natural as that. Indeed, the correspondence for a long time was entirely and Malone, now, are smart! Protect yourself in advance, hey? That's all right, and I don't blame you at all!"

"No, Mr. Bellman, it ain't that."

"This stuff about the colt's being tricky is nonsense," exclaimed Bellman, seriously. "I talked with the people who owned him, and with some friends of theirs and mine. They said he was high spirited, that's all. And he'll break with the rest if the jockey on him knows his business. Don't worry about that for a minute! If you say he's got the speed and some life to him, we'll win. That's all there is to it. The rest is up to you!"

And Bellman went his way to rejoin a party of friends. Wamsly reported the conversation to Pig Malone. Pig himself determined to set things right with his boss if possible, brought up the subject again, but was laughed as completely to scorn as Wamsly had been. His report to the jocky was the same as Wamsly's had been to him.

And the worst of it is, he's ordered a let-up on Cynthia, to hold the filly for some races later. That lets us out of the stakes except for Windblown."

Wamsly told his wife of the affair.

"It's too bad if you can't ride Cynthia," she said, "but they're Mr. Bellman's horses and you're working for him. Besides, what does it matter if this new horse is tricky and mean?"

"Nothing," lamented the boy, in dejection, "except this—that he is liable to get you in a tight place and go down on you in a hot race."

"But you mustn't get hurt, Art," exclaimed his wife. "You've got to be careful now, on account of the baby. Art, listen, can't you get out of riding this Windblown? Do you have to ride a mean horse?"

"Nothin' in our agreement about mean horses," said Art Wamsly, gloomily. "And I don't see but what I've got to ride or throw up my contract and get kicked off the track. I'll ride him," he declared, suddenly determined, "and I'll take mighty good care he don't go down with me."

"It'd be awful to have anything happen, Art, just when we're saving a little money and are almost ready to get out of this business. I couldn't stand it," she said. "And I'll be glad when it's all over with and we're away from the racing."

IT is just as well to pass more quickly over an unpleasant episode, even though it marks an epoch in the life of the jocky Arthur Wamsly. Pig Malone and Arthur brought Windblown down to the day of the Tucky stakes in fairly good condition for a hard race. The colt developed some temper and was unruly at all times, so that Art Wamsly had no confidence at all in him. Pig Malone was merely hopeful but James B. Bellman was positively convinced his new black colt, purchased at a long price, was destined to win the stakes.

Bellman, in fact, made a spectacle of himself by his wild wagering. He fairly splashed money around the betting rings, and caused some of his friends to do the same thing, with the result that odds went down on the colt so far as to make his rank close behind the favorite.

At the post, Windblown chose to display his bad manners and was left. There was no helping it. Art gave the black colt a hard ride when he did start and overhauled the trailers after a half-mile chase. In another quarter he was up in the second tier, and at the end of the mile, with a quarter to go,, was setting sail for the leaders, four of them flying in front.

Down the stretch to the finish Windblown pounded like a wild horse, but he could not get through, and Windblown was lucky to pinch off a good third. Pig Malone, the turf writers, the crowd generally, gave the boy credit for an honest, earnest ride, and applauded the colt's belated speed. But James B. Bellman, sportsman, raved.

"Where's that boy?" he demanded after the race. "Malone, I told you I wanted that colt taken away fast. Where's Wamsly—Boy, what's the idea? Why didn't you get away quicker?"

He grasped Wamsley by the shoulder and shook him angrily.

"Why, why, Mr. Bellman, I tried, I—" and then Art made a mistake. The thing that had been rankling in his heart for days came into his mouth, and he blurted it out. "If little Cynthia had been running, sir, it wouldn't have been like that."

"What's that, what's that?" demanded Bellman. "So, so? You had a little frameup against me, did you? Threw me down because I wanted the colt, eh? Well, we'll fix things right here. Boy, you're fired. Malone, you look for another jockey. That's all. I'll get some honest help! And some with a little nerve. No more quitters for me!"

Still raging, he turned and strode away from the little crowd that had gathered to witness the excitement. Any one of a dozen racing men would gladly have knocked him down had either Pig or Wamsly made a sign.

"Well," said the matter-of-fact Tilda, "I'm glad of it! Of course, it's too bad it had to happen that way. But I'm glad! It's the end of riding race horses, and we should be thankful."

"But I rode him, Tilda," complained the boy. "I pushed him clear out and Bellman's done me dirt!"

"It's too bad. Something ought to be done to him," Tilda sympathized. "But such a man will get his 'come-uppance.' There is nothing you can on his side. For the big businesses are quite as unbusinesslike as the government departments; they are no better in efficiency and much worse in manners.

But he obtained his interview at last; and it was with a sense of sour amusement that he presented himself at the factory and came face to face with four people whom he wanted to meet. One was Sir Samuel Bliss, for he had not yet performed those party services which led to his being known to us as Lord Normantowers. He was a small, alert man, like a ferret, with bristles of gray beard and hair, and active or even agitated movements. The second was his manager, Mr. Low, a stout, dark man with a thick nose and heavy rings, who eyed strangers with a curious, heavy suspicion like a congested sense of injury. It is believed that he expected to be persecuted. The third man was something of a surprise, for he was no other than his old friend, Dr. Horace Hunter, as healthy and hearty as ever, but even better dressed, as he now had a great official appointment as some kind of medical inspector of the sanitary conditions of the district. But the fourth man was the greatest surprise of all. For it appeared that their conference was honored by so great a figure in the scientific world as Professor Hake himself, who had revolutionized the modern mind with his new discoveries about the complexion in relation to health. When Hood realized who he was, a light of somewhat sinister understanding dawned on his long face

ON this occasion the professor advanced an even more interesting theory. He was a big blond man with blinking eyes and bull neck; and doubtless there was more to him than met the eye, as is the way with great men. He spoke last, and his theory was expounded with a certain air of finality. The manager had already stated that it was quite impossible for large quantities of petrol to have escaped, as only a given amount was used in the factory. Sir Samuel had explained, in what seemed an irascible and even irrelevant manner, that he had presented several parks to the public, and had the dormitories of his work people decorated in the simplest and best taste, and nobody could accuse him of vandalism or not caring for beauty and all that. Then it was that Professor Hake explained the theory of the protective screen. Even if it were possible, he said, for some thin film of petrol to appear on the water, as it would not mix with the water, the latter would actually be kept in a clearer condition. It would act, as it were, as a cap; as does the gelatinous cap upon certain preserved foods.

"That is a very interesting view," observed Hood. "I suppose you will write another book about that?"

"I think we are all the more privileged," remarked Bliss, "in hearing of the discovery in this personal fashion before our expert has laid it before the public."

"Yes," said Hood, "your expert in books?"

Sir Samuel Bliss stiffened in all his muscles. "I trust," he said, "you are not implying any doubt that our expert is an expert."

"I have no doubt of your expert," answered Hood gravely. "I do not doubt either that he is expert or that he is yours."

"Really, gentlemen," cried Bliss in a sort of radiance of protest, "I think such an insinuation about a man in Professor Hake's position—"

"Not at all, not at all," said Hood soothingly. "I'm sure it's a most comfortable position."

The professor blinked at him, but a light burned in the eyeballs under the heavy eyelids.

"If you come here talking like that—" he began, when Hood cut off his speech by speaking across him to somebody else, with a cheerful rudeness that was like a kick in its contempt.

"And what do you say, my dear doctor," he observed, addressing Hunter. "You used to be almost as romantic as myself about the amenities of this place. Do you remember how much you admired the landlords for keeping the place quiet and select; and how you said the old families preserved the beauty of old England?"

There was a silence, and then the young doctor spoke; he spoke loudly because he hardly knew how to speak otherwise, but the loudness was heavy with something like sulks.

"Well, it doesn't follow a fellow can't believe in progress. That's what's the matter with you, Hood, you don't believe in progress. We must move with the times; and somebody always has to suffer. Besides, it doesn't matter so much about the main water supply. When the new bill is passed, people will be obliged to use the Bulton filter in any case."

"I see," said Hood reflectively. "You first make a mess of the water for money, and then make a virtue of forcing people to clean it themselves."

"I don't know what you're talking about," said Hunter angrily.

"Well, I was thinking at the moment," said Hood in his rather crypt way, "I was thinking about Mr. Bulton. The man who owns the filters. I was wondering whether he might join us. We seem such a happy family party."

"I cannot see the use of prolonging this preposterous conversation," said Sir Samuel.

"Don't call the poor professor's theory preposterous," remonstrated Hood. "A little fanciful, perhaps. And as for the doctor's view, surely there's nothing preposterous in that. You don't think the chemicals will poison all the fish I catch, do you, doctor?"

"No, of course not," replied Hunter curtly.

"They will adapt themselves by natural selection," said Hood dreamily. "They will develop organs suitable to an oily environment. They will learn to love petrol."

"O, I have no time for this nonsense," said Hunter, and was turning to go, when Hood stepped in front of him and looked at him steadily.

"You mustn't call natural selection nonsense," he said. "I know all about that, at any rate. I can't tell whether liquids tipped off the shore will fall into the river, because I don't understand hydraulics. I don't know whether your machinery makes a hell of a noise every morning, for I've never studied acoustics. I don't know whether it stinks or not, because I haven't read your expert's new book on the nose. But I know all about adaptation to environment. I know that some of the lower organisms do really change with their changing conditions. I know there are creatures so low that they do survive by surrendering to every succession of mud and slime; and when things are slow they are slow, and when things are fast they are fast, and when things are filthy they are filthy. I thank you for convincing me of that."

He did not wait for a reply, but walked out of the room after bowing curtly to the rest; and that was the end of the great conference on the question of riparian rights and Thames conservancy in those parts.

The general public never heard much about it; at least until one catastrophe scene which was to follow. There was some faint ripple of the question some months later, when Dr. Horace Hunter was standing for parliament in that division. One or two questions were asked about his duties in relation to river pollution; but it was soon apparent that no party particularly wished to force the issue against the best opinions advanced on the other side. The greatest living authority on hygiene, Professor Hake, had actually written to the Times in the interests of science to say that in such a hypothetical case as that mentioned a medical man could only do what Dr. Hunter had apparently done. It so happened that the chief captain of industry in that part of the Thames valley, Sir Samuel Bliss, had himself, after gravely weighing the rival policies, decided to vote for Hunter. The great organizer's own mind was detached and philosophical in the matter; but it seems that his manager, a Mr. Low, was of the same politics and a more practical and pushful spirit; warmly urging the claims of Hunter on his work people; pointing out the many practical advantages they would gain by voting for that physician, and the still more practical disadvantage they might suffer by not doing so. Hence it followed that the blue ribbons, which were the local badges of the Hunterians, were not only to be found attached to the iron railings and wooden posts of the factory but to various human figures, known as "hands," which moved to and fro in it.

HOOD took no interest in the election; but while it was proceeding he followed the matter a little farther in another form. He was a lawyer, a lazy but in some ways a learned one; for his tastes being studious, he had originally learned the trade he had never used. More in defiance than in hope, he once carried the matter into the courts, pleading his own cause on the basis of a law of Henry the Third against frightening the fish of the King's liege subjects in the Thames valley. The judge, in giving judgment, complimented him on the ability and plausibility of his contention, but ultimately rejected it on ground equally historic and remote.

His lordship argued that no test seemed to be provided for ascertaining the degree of fear in the fish, or whether it amounted to that bodily fear of which the law took cognizance. But the learned judge pointed out the precedent of a law of Richard the Second against certain witches who had frightened children, which had been interpreted by so great an authority as Coke in the sense that the child "must return and of his own free will testify to the fear." It did not seem to be alleged that any one of the fish in question had returned and laid any such testimony before any proper authority; and he therefore gave judgment for the defendants. And when the learned judge happened to meet Lord Normantowers (as he was by this time) out at dinner that evening, he was gayly rallied and congratulated by that new nobleman on the lucidity and finality of his judgment. Indeed, the learned judge had really relished the logic both of his own and Hood's contention; but the conclusion was what he would have come to in any case. For our judges are not hampered by any hidebound code; they are progressive, like Dr. Hunter, and ally themselves on principle with the progressive forces of the age, especially those they are likely to meet out at dinner.

But it was this abortive law case that led up to something that altogether obliterated it in a blaze of glory, so far as Mr. Owen Hood was concerned. He had just left the courts and, turning down the streets that led in the direction of the station, he made his way thither in something of a brown study, as was his wont. The streets were filled with faces; it struck him for the first time that there were thousands and thousands of people in the world. There were more faces at the railway station; and then when he had glanced idly at four or five of them, he saw one that was to him as incredible as the face of the dead.

She was coming out of the tea-room, carrying a handbag, just like anybody else. That mystical perversity of his mind, which had insisted on sealing up the sacred memory like something hardly to be sought in mere curiosity, had fixed it in its original colors and setting like something of which no detail could be changed without the vision dissolving. He would have conceived it almost impossible that she could appear in anything but white or out of anything but a wood. And he found himself turned topsy-turvy by an old and common incredulity of men in his condition; being startled by the coincidence that blue suited her as well as white and that in what he remembered of that woodland was something else; something to be said even for teashops and railway stations.

She stopped in front of him, and her pale fluttering eyelids lifted from her blue gray eyes. With a sort of incongruous incredulity, he knew that she knew him.

"Why," she said, "you are the boy that jumped in the river."

"I'm no longer a boy," answered Hood, "but I'm ready to jump in the river again."

"Well, don't jump on the railway line," she said, as he turned with a swiftness suggestive of something of the kind, she was herself moving towards one of the less crowded platforms.

"To tell you the truth," he said, "I was thinking of jumping into a railway train. Do you mind if I jump into your railway train?"

"Well, I'm going to Birkstead," she said rather doubtfully.

Mr. Owen did not in the least care where he was going, as he had resolved to go there; but as a matter of fact, he remembered a wayside station on that line that lay very near to what he had in view; so he tumbled into the carriage if possible with more alacrity; and landscapes shot by them as they sat looking in a dazed and almost foolish fashion at each other. At last the girl smiled with a sense of the absurdity of the thing.

"I heard about you from a friend of yours," she said. "He came to call on us soon after it happened; at least, that was when he first came. You know Dr. Hunter, don't you?"

"Yes," replied Owen, a shadow coming over his shining hour, "do you —do you know him well?"

"I know him pretty well now," said Miss Elizabeth Seymour.

The shadow on his spirit blackened swiftly; he suspected something quite suddenly and savage. Hunter, in Crane's old phrase, was not a man who let the grass grow under his feet. It was so like him to have somehow used the incident as an introduction to the Seymours. Things were always stepping stones for Hunter, and the little rock in the river had been a stepping stone, to the country house. But was the country house a stepping stone to something else? Suddenly Hood realized that all his angers had been abstract angers. He had never hated a man before.

At that moment the train stopped at the station of Crawford. It was seemingly a country station, but Hood knew it was within a half mile of the things round which his indignant imagination had brooded so long.

"I wish you'd get out here with me," he said abruptly. "Only for a little—and it might be the last time. I want you to do something."

SHE looked at him with a curious expression, and said in a rather low voice. "What do you want me to do?"

"I want you to come and pick bluebells," he said harshly.

She stepped out of the train, and they went up a winding country road without a word. They both had the air of beings that were blind like somnambulists; what was in her mind may never be known, but what was in his was a kind of fury. The little white road curled over the gray-green down that shut out the landscape behind like a wall.

"I remember!" she said suddenly. "When you get to the top of this hill you see the woods where the bluebells were, and your little island beyond."

"Come on and see it,' said Owen Hood.

They stepped on to the crest of the hill and stood. Below them the black factory belched its livid smoke into the air; and where the wood had been were rows of little houses like boxes, built of dirty yellow brick.

Hood spoke. "And when you shall see the abomination of desolation sitting in the Holy of Holies—isn't that when the world is supposed to end? I wish the world would end now, with you and me standing on a hill."

She was staring at the place with parted lips and more than her ordinary pallor; he knew she understood something monstrous and symbolic in the scene; yet her first remark was perky and trivial. On the nearest of the yellow brick boxes were visible the cheap colors of various advertisements, and larger than the rest a blue poster proclaiming "Vote for Hunter." With a final touch of tragic pathos, Hood remembered that it was the last and most sensational day of the election. But the girl had already found her voice.

"Is that Dr. Hunter?" she asked with commonplace curiosity. "Is he standing for parliament?"

A load that lay on Hood's mind like a rock, suddenly rose like an eagle, and he felt as if the hill he stood on were higher than Everest. By the insight of his own insanity, he knew well enough that she would have known well enough whether Hunter was standing, if—if there had been anything like what he supposed. The removal of the steadying weight staggered him, and he had said something quite indefensible.

"I thought you would know. I thought you and he were probably—well, the truth is, I thought you were engaged, though I really don't know why."

"I can't imagine why," said Elizabeth Seymour. "I heard he was engaged to Lord Normantower's daughter. They've got our place now, you know."

There was a silence, and then Hood spoke suddenly in a loud and cheerful voice.

"Well, what I say is 'Vote for Hunter'," he said heartily. "After all, why not note for Hunter? Good old Hunter! I hope he'll be a member of parliament. I hope he'll be prime minister. I hope he'll be president of the world state that Wells talks about. By George, he deserves to be emperor of the polar system."

"But why," she protested, "why should he deserve all that?"

"For not being engaged to you, of course," he replied. "I'd like to chair him round the town and give him a torchlight procession."

Even as he spoke he started and stared across at the river island; for his own words had fallen with the significance of a falling star. He stamped and made a gesture as of snapping his fingers.

"A torchlight procession," he cried. "I believe it would work. I believe it could be done. Yes, the hour has come and the prophecy shall be fulfilled. By stars and blazes, I will give him a torchlight procession."

HE had been almost dancing with excitement on the top of the ridge; now he suddenly went bounding down it, calling to the girl to follow as carelessly as if they had been two children playing hide and seek. Strangely enough, perhaps, she did follow; more strangely still, when we consider the extravagant scenes through which she allowed herself to be led. There was nothing particularly new about all the noisy nonsense of the election; but the Hunterian party seemed a good deal bewildered by the new enthusiasm of Hood for Hunter. She never could have described that saturnalia; she only felt that through all the sense that it was a harlenquinade at the end of a pantomime there was still a faint undercurrent of Hood's phrase about the end of the world, as if a bank holiday could also be a day of judgment.

Hood dominated all the demagogy of the day, was received everywhere with roars of mingled derision and admiration. Bliss and Hunter and the rest watched him with rather pale and puzzled faces, lest he should turn the possibly intend to burn the witch, for he brandished the blazing torch he carried so as to make a sort of halo round Hunter's astonished countenance. Then, springing on the scrap heap by the brink of the river, he addressed the crowd for the last time.

"Fellow citizens, we meet upon the shore of the Thames; the Thames which is to Englishmen all that the Tiber ever was to Romans. We meet in a valley which has been almost as much the haunt of English poets as of English birds. Never was there an art so native to our island as our old national tradition of landscape painting in water color, never was that water color so luminous or so delicate as when dedicated to these holy waters. It was in such a scene that one of the most exquisite of our elder poets repeated as a burden to his meditations the single line, 'Sweet Thames, run softly till I end my song.'

"Rumors have been heard of some intention to trouble these waters; but we have been amply reassured. Names that now stand as high as those of our national poets and painters are a warrant that the stream is still as clear and pure and beneficent as of old. We all know the beautiful work Mr. Bulton has done in the matter of filters. Dr. Hunter supports Mr. Bulton. I mean Mr. Bulton supports Dr. Hunter. I may also mention no less a man than Mr. Low. 'Sweet Thames, run softly till I end my song.'

"But then, for that matter, we all support Dr. Hunter. I myself have always found him quite supportable; I should say quite satisfactory. He is truly a progressive, and nothing gives me greater pleasure than to watch him progress. Sometimes I lie awake at night; and, in the silence of the whole universe, I seem to hear him climbing, climbing, climbing. All the numerous patients among whom he has labored so successfully in this locality will join in a heartfelt expression of joy if he passes to the higher world of Westminster. I trust I shall not be misunderstood. 'Sweet Thames, run softly while I end my song.'

"My only purpose tonight is to express that unanimity. There may have been times when I differed from Dr. Hunter; but I am glad to say that all that is past, and I have now nothing but the most friendly feelings towards him, for reasons which I will not mention, though I have plenty to say. In token of this reconciliation I here solemnly cast from me this torch. As that firebrand is quenched in the cool silver waters of that sacred stream, so shall all such feuds perish in the healing pool of universal peace."

Before anybody knew what he was doing he had whirled his flambeau in a flaming wheel round his head and sent it flying like a meteor out into the dim eddies of the river. All the faces were visibly staring, for they were all lit up as by a ghastly firelight by a great pale lambent flame that leaped up for a moment from the surface of the stream; a flame that the crowd watched as it might have watched a comet.

"There," cried Owen Hood, turning suddenly on the girl and seizing her arm as if demanding congratulations, "so much for old Crane's prophecy."

"Who in the world is old Crane?" she asked, "and what did he prophesy? It's what he said that's so important. He didn't like my moping about with books and a fishing rod, and he said, standing on that very island, 'You may know a lot, but I don't think you'll ever set the Thames on fire. I'll eat my hat it you do'."

But the story of how old Crane ate his hat is one upon which some readers at least can now look back as on labor and suffering bravely endured. And if it be possible for any of them to desire to know any more either about Mr. Crane or Mr. Hood, then must they gird themselves for the grinding ordeal of reading the story of "The Unobtrusive Traffic of Captain Pierce," and their trials are for a time deferred.

Knowing that, she decided forthwith that no two-by-four scheme would do. It must be something quite out of the ordinary.

She got some figures that showed ten or twelve million or more women are working in industry. She saw that group as her field. She saw each industrial plant as a unit and those units as her working basis. Any poor working girl would like to take a trip to France. Any industrial manager would be glad to see one of his own girls win such a trip without any cost to her. All he had to do was to promote the thing among his employees and get them voting for the girl of their choice. Naturally, after a bit there would be rivalry between plants, and rivalry stimulates votes. The votes were only ten cents each.

ANNE MORGAN decided to try out the scheme first in a Massachusetts city of medium size, full of manufacturing and industrial plants. She sent up a promoter who visited the captains of industry with the Morgan name back of her and got them interested, and they passed the word along to their managers. The trick was done. A short campaign brought in around $8,000. It had cost about two thousand. There was $6,000 to the good and only about $1,000 needed for that one member of the "Good Will Tour."

That Massachusetts experiment showed the thing could be done. So they went to it on a big scale. Returns in single cities ran into six figures. Those free trips to Europe were enjoyed by girls who would never have been able to go all on their own, and because of Miss Morgan's influence with the powers that be in France the girls really were accorded privileges that many a tourist traveling de luxe never dreamed of.

It was at one of the luncheons in Detroit that Mrs. Henry Ford appeared. The campaign was always launched with a luncheon. To that extent Anne Morgan did stick to the club women's formulae. Those of us who weren't Detroiters were just dying to know if Mrs. Ford had come to the luncheon in a Ford car. She is rather sweet and quiet, you know, and she really looked as if she might have come in one of the Ford models. We just had to find out. So we insisted on helping her down the steps and finding her car for her after the luncheon. She wasn't very keen on this, but we persisted. Was she riding in a Ford car that day? She was not. She was riding in a most luxurious and expensive French car, and her chauffeur was all liveried and everything!

It really was something of a letdown for Anne Morgan and for those who worked with her when those campaigns were all over, because they were exciting, and in most of the cities they were very successful. Only California didn't seem to warm up so quickly.

ELIZABETH PERKINS, sister of George Perkins, and a member of Anne Morgan's own social set in New York stood by the guns through it all. Elizabeth is a fine sort. She never cared for any publicity for herself, or for any of the glory. She has always been perfectly content to sit in a little office in New York and run that end of things while Anne was going to dinners and all sorts of lovely things with Mr. Myron T. Herrick in Paris. Elizabeth Perkins never took any salary, but she kept office hours—still keeps them, in fact—and she's got a sort of a Wall Street mind, too.

Well, after the "Good Will Tours" were over and the excitement had died down, Elizabeth began to look around for something to do until Anne got back from Europe. She isn't the type to mark time. So she began to "sell locations," to the movie people. When she first told me about it I had not an idea what it was all about. But it is like this: a manager calls up and says he wants a Japanese garden within twenty-four hours—just orders a Japanese garden, you know, as if he were ordering a pound of potatoes. Now naturally nobody who has a Japanese garden is going to let the movie people invade it. Elizabeth Perkins, sitting at the other end of the telephone, looks unmoved, and says calmly that she will let them know whether or not they have a Japanese garden on tap. Then she does some thinking, and she converses with several friends. Why, certainly, someone reminds her, George Wickersham has a Japanese garden. To be sure he has!

Do you think that movie man could have got a favorable word from Geore Wickersham? Not a bit of it. He couldn't get any kind of word from him. But you see, Anne and Elizabeth and George are friends. George hears about the "cause," how they need money, etc., and if you saw a picture about that time with a Japanese garden in it, it was George's very own garden, and you may be sure that Elizabeth got a nice fat check for the cause from the movie manager.

NOW, as I said, Anne Morgan is back home again. She is all nicely located in her very own attrative little house at Number Three Sutton Place. Close by live Elsie de Wolfe and Elizabeth Marbury and other notables. At the back of the houses—or do they call that the front now?—there is a charming garden which overlooks the East River. There are terraces down to the river bank and there are trees and flowers and shrubs, and on moonlight nights it is heavenly in Anne Morgan's little garden. Just beyond this row of houses, called little in New York, is the Queensborough Bridge, the lights of which shine bewitchingly. And this Millionaire Maiden's Row just turns its back on hectic New York.

It really is very romantic. I am just wondering and thinking of Anne Morgan in that charming little house with its fragrant garden and its gleaming river, if her mind isn't tired of big things and if her soul isn't yearning for something more personal. Anne is so good looking!

There is at least one person who isn't keen on Anne Morgan's method of uplifting the world. It is Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont. She says giving is more important for a woman of name and fame and money than getting. And Mrs. Belmont practices what she preaches. She bought outright three houses opposite the Capitol in Washington and presented the deed to the property to the National Woman's Party. But there was a string tied to it. There is a proviso that no man must ever be given a job other than a menial one. In case this condition is not met, the property reverts to Mrs. Belmont's estate. "And yet," say some loftily, "Mrs. Belmont employed a man architect to do the remodeling on that house, although there are a good number of perfectly good women architects."

MRS. BELMONT, up to date, has not replied to this.

No, Mrs. Belmont does not approve of Anne's method of uplifting at all. But with Mrs. Belmont on Long Island and Anne in Sutton Place they get along all right

The other night Anne Morgan invited a group of business women to Sutton Place and gave them a real party. They were members of the executive committee of the American Woman's Association of which she is treasurer.

Will she help that organization in its efforts to raise a million dollars for a super-clubhouse in New York for business women? If she only would turn in and do that, with the Morgan technique, it would save those girls a lot of time and a lot of trouble, for in very truth there aren't many like her. Many? No, there isn't even one!

do now, Art. Everybody that knows you, knows you're square, and we'll get started in something else. Let's think about that."

Without further attention to the relative racing merits of fillies and colts, with no desire to analyze the way of a wealthy racing man with horseflesh, we may now record the movements of Arthur Wamsly, ex-jockey, his wife, the matter-of-fact Tilda, and their boy, Arthur Wamsly, Jr., passing one year and weighing "darn near twenty-five pounds."

ART WAMSLY and his little family joined the throngs lured by the oil boom and moved to Oklahoma City. With his small savings he opened a small cigar store. He was naturally thrifty, and he had a thrifty wife. In a year he had his original investment out, and in a savings bank, an equal sum still in the business, and the business itself running along.

But in five years he had the cigar store and the oil bug. His savings were represented by oil stocks, oil leases, drilling agreements, shares and miscellaneous other oil papers. Little Art was darn near ready to start to school.

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING JUNE 15, 1924.

THE GOLDEN STAIR

By Jane Corby

With a start of admiration
And a feather in his hat,
A young prince who was hunting
Paused to murmur, "What was that?"
For through the forest sweetly
Swelled a squeaky little sound—
The voice of someone singing,
Although no one was around.

He followed it directly
Till he reached a lonely tower,
Without a window or a door—
In fact, a thief-proof bower.
And while the prince with eager eyes
Stood watching in the wood,
A witch came hobbling up with
An intention far from good.

"Miss Rapunzel! Miss Rapunzel!
Let down your golden hair."
The wicked witch whined winningly
Entirely unaware
Of any hidden hearer;
From above a lovely girl
Leaned out and let her hair down
In a long and golden swirl.

Then up the golden ladder
Climbed the witch and disappeared;
The while the young prince pondered
How her projects could be queered.
And when she went away,
Without a single hesitation,
He stood where she had stood
And gave a perfect imitation.

Imagine how the maiden
Gasped in sudden, sharp surprise,
And how she wriggled both her ears
And rolled her pretty eyes!
The prince was most insistent
That she marry him at once
(He didn't quite perceive that she Was something of a dunce).

She surely was a stupid, though,
For when the prince departed
To get a silken ladder so's
To finish what he started,
The witch came back and Rapunzel
Said, "My! How slow you climb.
The prince came in ten seconds flat—
A quarter of the time!"

Well, that was that; the angry witch
Cut off the golden hair,
And led her to a desert,
Leaving her deserted there.
The prince, returning to the tower,
She gave an awful push;
He promptly lost his balance
And his eyesight, in a bush.

So, all because the maiden was too dull to comprehend
What were the witch's motives
They had trouble without end.
But finally they met again;
Rapunzel, with delight,
Wept on the prince's forehead
And her tears restored his sight!

(Note: Rapunzel never mourned the hair
Of which she had been robbed;
She never let it grow again—
She said she liked it bobbed.)

A BOY'S FIRST BIG GAME HUNT

(The story thus far: Sandy Halliday, a fourteen year old boy, has accompanied his father on a trip to British East Africa to secure specimens of big game for an American museum. The party goes up into the region of the elephant kingdom and all narrowly escape death in an elephant stampede. Two of the mammoth tuskers are killed and also a cheetah which attacks. Sandy goes out on the plains alone and is accosted by an animal he cannot see. He fears it is a tiger, but it turns out to be a harmless warthog. The travelers break camp and go for a float down a river and on the way shoot a hippopotamus. It sinks but they do not know whether they have killed it.)

The hippopotamus rose to the surface of the water after a period of time, as all the hunters felt sure it would, for Mr. Halliday was an expert shot and rarely lost his prey. The problem was to get word to the natives, who were on the march back some miles, to come down to help in cutting up the animal. Such things have to be done almost immediately and the men were not likely to see any of their helpers for several hours.

"I know nothing about preservation," said Allan Smith, "and I don't believe Sandy does. Now if he's willing, I think we two might start tramping back to meet the porters while you fellows begin work on the beast.

"'Course I'll go!" spoke up Sandy, reaching for his rifle. It was decided to do as Smith said. The naturalists set to work at skinning the big water animal which weighed about two tons, and the younger men set off on foot.

There was a good trail and the boys walked rapidly, realizing the value of making haste. They reminded each other at the end of two hours that they should soon be meeting their porters. Sandy stopped once to watch a group of young monkeys playing like kittens, and Allan got several yards ahead of him. When he started to run to catch up, some pebbles in one of his shoes pained his toes so that he stopped again to remove them. When he looked up, Allan had passed from sight in a bend of the path. Sandy was rising when a cry from Allan suddenly broke the forest quiet. Sandy fairly tore down the road. The sight that met his eyes was worse than he had feared. Allan lay in the path, a male lion pawing him mercilessly. Evidently it had pounced without warning.

Sandy lost not a moment in firing. It occurred to him that the bullet was as likely to hit Allan as the beast, for they were a struggling, rolling mass. But the bullet struck the lion in the neck through the thick mane. The creature leaped in pain, reared, and then, spying Sandy, came raging forward as if to do away with the new foe. Sandy reloaded and shot again. He missed. On came the lion. He shot again and the second shot went wild. The lion was upon him, its hot breath was flung into Sandy's face as the animal crouched to leap upon him. The boy, using every ounce of power in his body, flung his gun upon the lion's head. At that instant a shot tore the air. The lion stood rigid a moment, then dropped over dead.

Sandy broke into nervous sobs. Allan, his shoulders dripping blood, was sinking back on the ground, weak from his effort. Wounded though he was, he had fired in time to save Sandy.

Sandy ran weeping to his comrade's side. Allan had fainted and was bleeding profusely. The younger boy hastily tore off his own shirt, washed the deep clawed spots on Smith's body with water from his canteen, bound them with strips from the shirt and fanned the wounded man back to consciousness.

Allan was suffering greatly. He groaned now and then, too faint to talk. Sandy did not know what to do. He could not leave his pal and go ahead for help, for the hyenas and mountain leopards would creep down to feed upon the body of the dead lion and Allan would fall prey to them. There was nothing to do but sit by and wait. For the first time since he had reached Africa, he longed for the safety of home. He called aloud several times, but only the monkeys chattered back at him.

It was perhaps twenty minutes later that the sound of chanting reached Sandy. He leaped up, breaking into halloos of help. Some natives ran forward and Sandy almost wept anew with relief at seeing they were his father's porters. The black men grasped the situation at a glance. Quickly some of them made a litter on which to carry Smith. Others took charge of the lion. Sandy felt a great stream of gratitude well up in his heart for those barbaric men with their queer headdresses and chains and beads. Before long they had the wounded man comfortable and were ready to start forward on the march to their masters.

When Mr. Halliday and his companions were reached, the men pitched camp. One of the runners went for a native doctor who lived in a nearby village and later he came to dress Allan's wounds. When Sandy at last went to bed that night, he did so with a feeling of great thankfulness that his friend who had saved his life would recover.

The attack upon Allan Smith was the last event of the game hunt. The next day Mr. Halliday announced that he had obtained all his specimens and was ready to return to civilization. Every member of the party agreed heartily with him that they were willing to leave the jungle as soon as possible. A week later the Americans mounted the gangplank of a German steamer in the harbor of Mombasa, Allan, able to be up, leaning on Sandy's arm.

"It's been a dangerous trip," said Allan with a smile at Sandy, as the steamer slipped her moorings, "but I guess it was worth it."

"Yep," agreed Sandy, smiling back, "I believe it was."

"That's funny! My story book says that rabbits eat cabbage and bark."

A TIN LANTERN

This thing is so simple to make that all I'm going to say about it is to get a tin can, punch a hole in it for the candle, stick a tin handle on it by driving in a couple of nails for rivets and you are all set.

It won't be long until camping trips get under way and a thing like this tin lantern will come in pretty handy. How much camping have you fellows done? I hope you like it as well as I do, although I hate like the dickens to have to put up a tent when the rain is just slushing all around.

Another thing I hate to do when on a camping trip is to have to cook for the crowd, if there are more than three in the party. Gee, I think I'd rather go hungry than peel a bushel of potatoes, and it seems to me that three people on camping trip can eat just about that many every day.

EDDIE COLLINS ANSWERS BOYS' BASEBALL QUESTIONS

(Written by Eddie Collins Exclusively for This Page.)

Is the Game Any Different Now from What it Was When You Broke In?

As far as the game itself is concerned I would say it had not changed greatly. At least it is not any faster or better. As I look back sixteen or seventeen years I see the Cubs and Athletics standing out. Following down the line the Boston Red Socks of 1915 and 1916 deserve consideration. For smart, intelligent baseball, I think they outclass the present day champions. For sheer power, no one questions the ability of the present world's champions. But in days I speak of, that power was not there. Versatility of play was more of a prerequisite than it is today. Runs were harder to get then than now. Commercially, the game has avdanced tremendously, but this is out of my discussion, so I will omit it. Keeping step with it commercially, an advance in salaries occurred all along the line. Players take the game seriously, but I think more philosophically. The rivalry and bitterness that used to be so evident between teams is noticeable by its absence today.

However, better deportment exists, more college men predominate, substitutes and extra men are more numerous and it is more a survival of the fittest. Some one is ever ready to take your place, if the occasion presents itself.

Do You Enjoy Playing Ball?

Due in a measure to the extensive commercial atmosphere that has prevailed about major league baseball in the last few years, I don't wonder that many people ask whether the game has a fascination and is the pleasure to its participants that was evidenced more in the past than in the present age. The money end of the game is more paramount today than fifteen years ago, but you can never make me believe any of us will ever live to see the day when baseball is played for dollars alone. It never can be and the standards and quality of ball now played, be maintained. It always has been and always will be a sport, and I cannot understand how any one can play at it and play well enough to hold a job and not like it.

One night a few years ago in Los Angeles two masked men shot a policeman at the door of the hotel where Eddie Collins and his team were staying and rushed in upon the meeting of the players. Many of them had large sums of money on their persons. They were forced to put up their hands while the bandits relieved them of a total of $10,000 and escaped. Eddie Collins lost several hundred dollars himself, but saved his very valuable diamond tie pin because, when he saw those robbers coming, he slipped it in the neckband of his shirt!

So, you see, the fellows who talk about Collins' quick action on the diamond are saying more than they know!

The water colors, which are just the things to color the pictures in the coming contests, were donated F. J. Cooledge & Sons, of this city.

The tickets to Loew's Grand theater were given by the management of the theater, and are good for the vaudeville show as well as the Tom Mix picture.

Fashionable women are always slender

Can you wear the modish clothes which you see in the shops? Or must you deny yourself pretty things because you know they will not fit—because your figure is no longer slender?

The smartest costumes all require a slender figure—a smooth unbroken silhouette.

Yet many fashionable women who now wear original models, once suffered from overweight. They found the pleasant way to reduce—Marmola Tablets (thousands of men and women each year regain healthy, slender figures this way). With these tablets you, too, can have a slender figure—no exercises or diets.

All drug stores have Marmola Tablets—one dollar a box, or they will be sent in plain wrapper, postpaid, by the Marmola Co., 1700 General Motors Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Graduate Nurse

Bringing charm, immaculacy, and peace of mind in solving woman's oldest hygienic problem—the NEW, scientific way

This is to offer you a book telling of a new way in personal hygiene. A book that thousands of women have read, and found peace of mind, exquisiteness and better health as a result. Simply write for it.

Modern science has found a better way — safer, less embarrassing, more hygienic — than the old-time "sanitary pad."

It is called KOTEX. Nurses in war time France first discovered it. Now 8 in 10 women in the better walks of life use it. The bad habit of makeshift methods is rapidly being ended.

60% of many ills common to women, according to numerous authorities, are due to improper, old methods. That's why doctors so strongly urge KOTEX.

What it does

KOTEX is a newly discovered material. Made of Cellucotton, it is far more absorbent than ordinary cotton. It absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture.

It is hygienically treated. Hence does not invite dangerous germ life to increase and multiply — the cause of many ailments.

No trouble disposing of

It is as easily disposed of as a piece of tissue—simply discard it. No embarrassment, no difficulty.

Women who seek daintiness, peace of mind, exquisiteness and safety under all circumstances, use it. Once you do, no other method will ever satisfy. And millions will tell you this.

Easy to get it

All drug and department stores have KOTEX in plain packages. Get it without embarrassment simply by saying "Kotex." 12 snowy white, immaculate folds in the medium package.

I would like to send you a new book for women on this subject, written by a doctor. Just write for it. And if you have never tried KOTEX, I will be glad to send you a sample, free.
